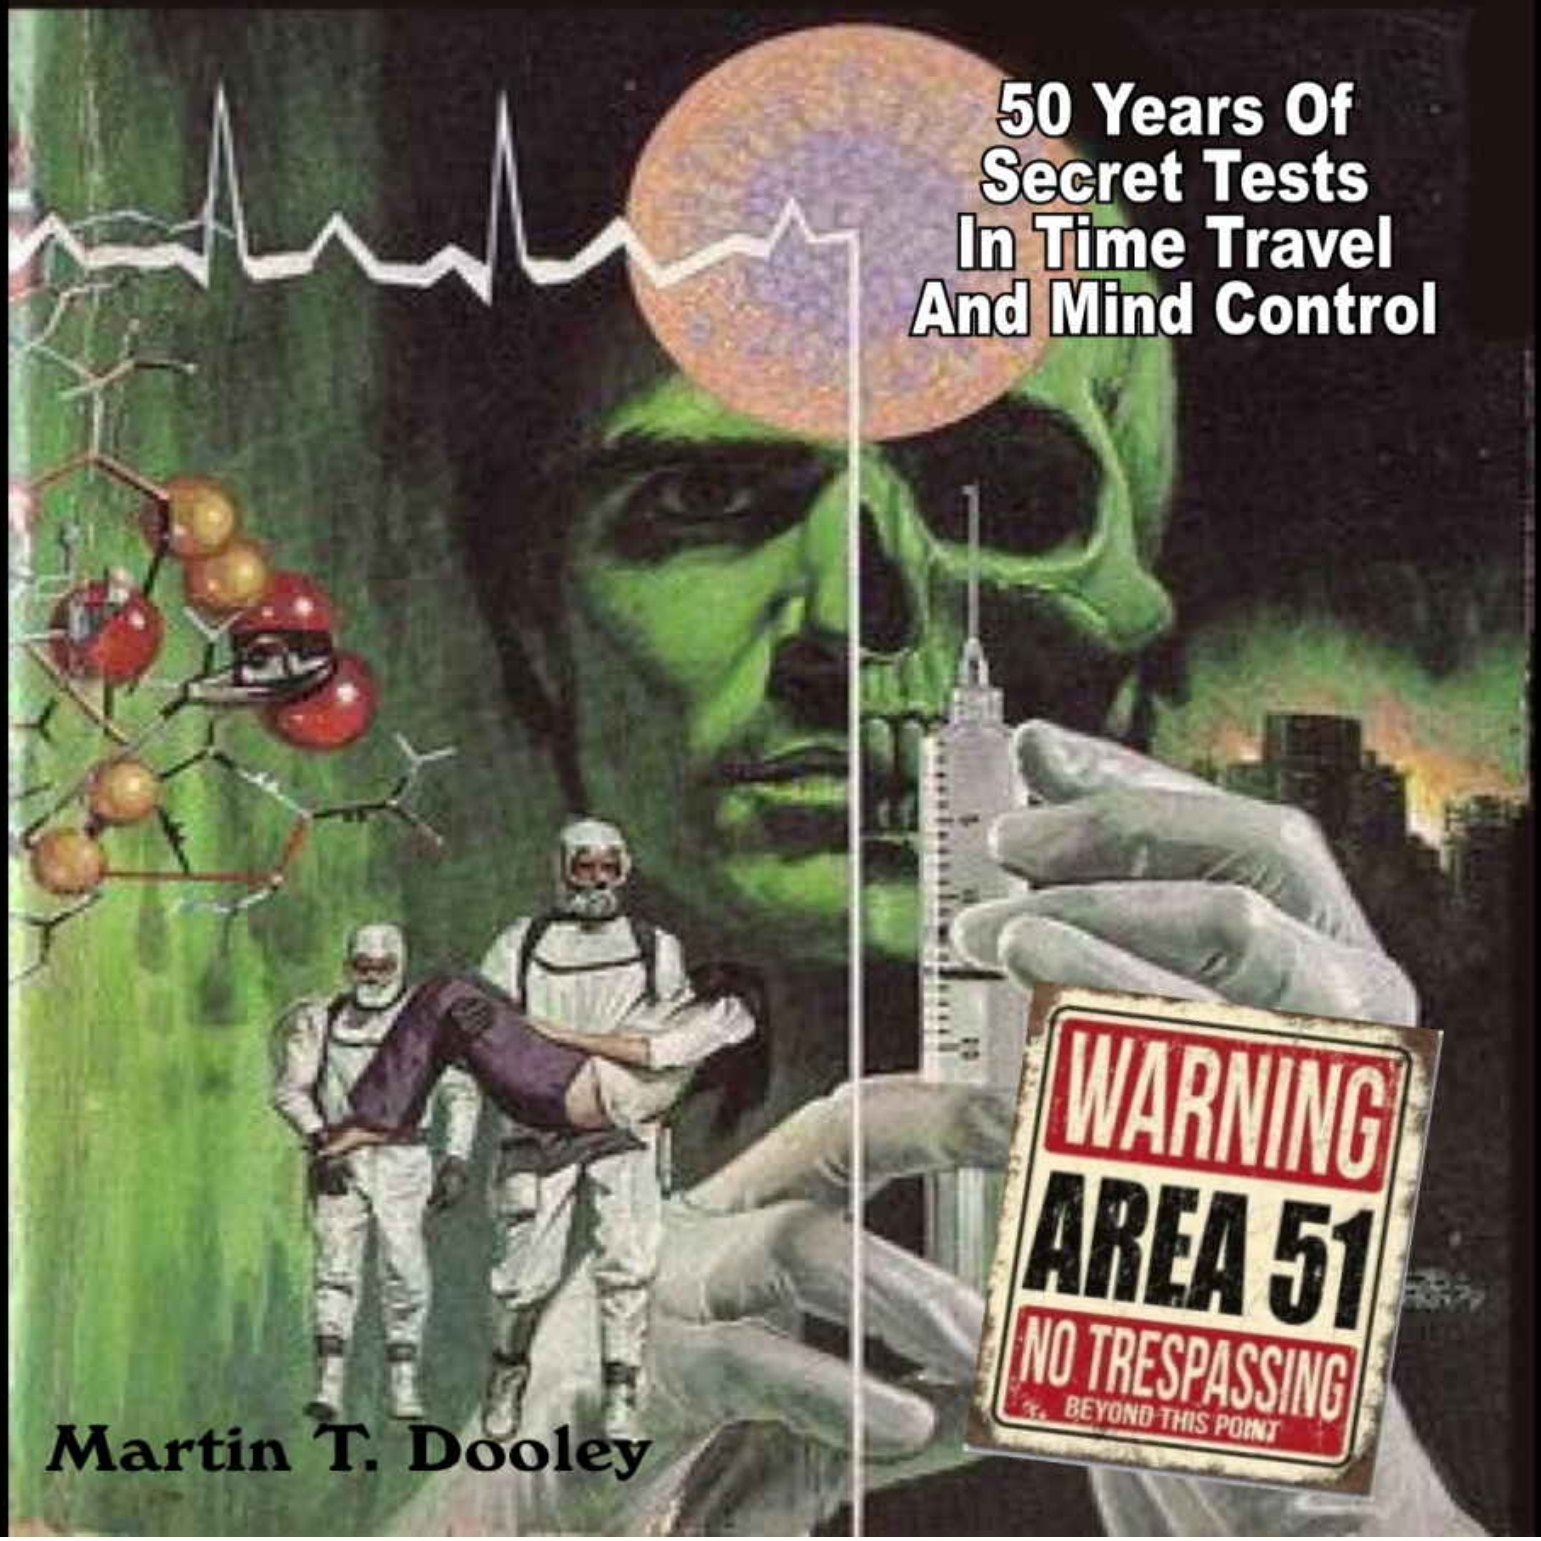
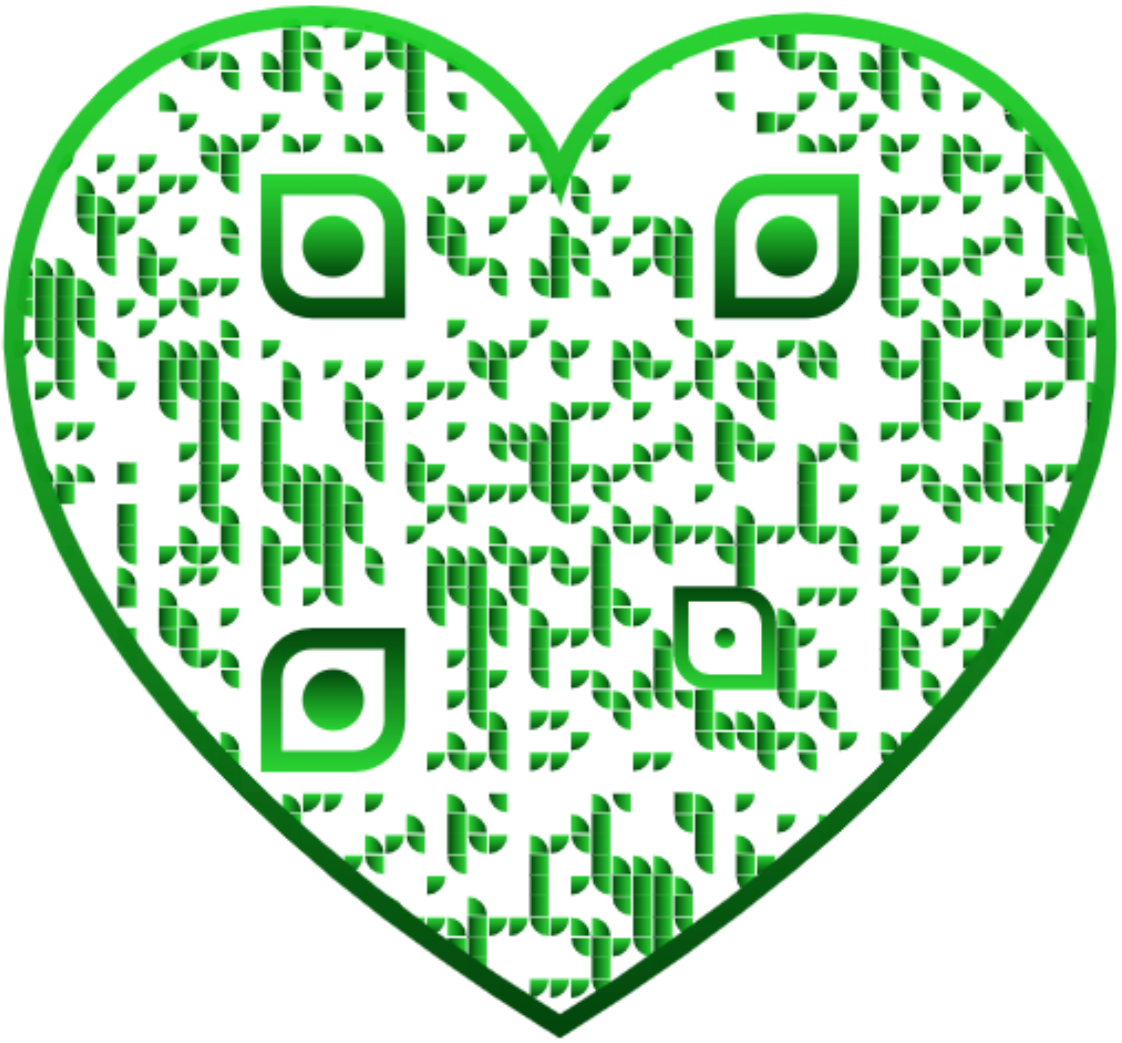
UNDERGROUND

The Unholy Triangle

Montauk • Dulce • Area 51



Martin T. Dooley



UNDERGROUND: The Unholy Triangle
Montauk, Dulce and Area 51

by

Martin T. Dooley

Copyright © 2021
Heartline Sanctuary Publishing Company

All rights reserved. No part of this book may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic, mechanical, photocopying, recording, or otherwise, without prior permission by the publisher.

Printed in America

CONTENTS

Preface .....
Introduction i
Chapter One .....
Chapter Two .....
Chapter Three .....
Chapter Four .....
Chapter Five .....
Chapter Six .....
Chapter Seven .....
Chapter Eight .....
Chapter Nine .....

Montauk, Dulce, and Area 51, The Unholy Triangle
…Origins, Tunnels,
and Realities

By Martin T. Dooley

PREFACE:

For years, I tried to stay away from sharing what is to be revealed in this book. I was frightened and still am. I had run into individuals in my investigations whom I knew to be honest people who had endured traumatic experiences. I knew they were telling the truth and that is precisely why I avoided any real involvement.

However, I would be wrong to remain silent forever. I am seeking no publicity, I am not going on podcasts or doing slick videos. I am simply writing this book in the hope that the truth will draw the readers to it, who are ready for truth. This book offers a definitive, detailed look at the truth as pertains to these three underground installations.

The truth about three clandestine installations, Montauk, Dulce, and Area 51/52, and their connections to each other, is a dark truth which makes us recoil as if hearing something “unholy.” Indeed, they are unholy and they are not like other U.S. military bases or any other military bases in the world. In fact, the concept “military base” no longer fits them at all.

We must ask: Whose military is this? What is their country of origin? Are they not from this world but from some alien “other-world?” Or is there something this evil in the human psyche? Or, is it a combination?

I have investigated UFO sightings and experiences for many years, mostly in the state of New York. I have come to know individuals who have had strange and terrible experiences. I try to keep myself objective and away from their emotional reactions, because it is safer for my mental health but also because extreme emotions seldom solve mysteries such as, “What was it I witnessed in the sky?” or, “Why do I still feel contact with that UFO I saw?” But, my emotions have been deeply touched by witnesses (victims) about whom I will tell you. This book is for them, and for all who seek the truth.

INTRODUCTION:

In this Introduction, we have the Unholy Triangle, Montauk, Dulce, and Area 51.

MONTAUK:

Forty years ago, I began investigating the claims of a middle-aged housewife. I will call her Megan in this book. She lived near my town and was my second cousin, although I didn't grow up knowing her well. I had met her at a few big family get togethers, such as picnics and holiday dinners. She was very hesitant to come to me, the local UFO investigator, but she was also desperate. In fact, she was on the verge, in my opinion, of a nervous breakdown. She could not handle what had just happened to her.

Megan had been taken, with force, twice, to a place we call "Montauk." Montauk was officially Camp Hero or the Montauk Air Force Station, near Montauk, Long Island, New York, but it is much more.

Megan had ongoing UFO sightings at her home outside a small town near Montauk, and paranormal events inside her home for about 18 months, before her first abduction into the deep dark corridors of Montauk. What happened to her inside Montauk was horrific. I was so impacted by Megan's suffering and confusion, that I began quietly investigating Montauk and have now done so, for 41 years. I do not seek publicity; in fact, I abhor it. It brings progress to a screeching halt. However, I do feel I must get Megan's first-hand account into print, as told to me in three sessions.

Of course, this book also goes in depth into Montauk's long history of bizarre research and experiments, from psychological warfare including exotic forms of LSD and even stronger hallucinogenic drugs being given to unwilling recipients, to time travel from one point in the quantum field (and thus, travel in time itself), to another point in time, to the weaponization of research regarding the human mind (mind control), "time tripping," and more.

Point Montauk was supposedly closed down in 1981 in a big hurry, but I have discovered evidence that it still does its evil research today underground, with entrances only underground. These entrances would lead to military tunnels which then stretch in several directions across the country. One such tunnel may go directly, all the way to Dulce Base in northern New Mexico.

THE TUNNELS, BETWEEN:

It seems likely that Montauk operations did not really close down but that Montauk and Dulce both engage in bizarre, dangerous research. They are connected not only by underground highways but by underground mag-lev (magnetic levitation) trains, also known as a “bullet trains.”

I have gathered evidence and interviewed soldiers who have been in military tunnels which, they state, have seemed to go on forever. The general public has no idea of how far-reaching and all-encompassing this tunnel system is. When it comes to Montauk’s evil legacy still being alive and enlarged upon, these tunnels are truly “The Tunnels Between 2 Hells.”

DULCE BASE:

On the Jicarilla Apache Reservation, there is an installation which stretches at least seven stories underground. It is very near the small town of Dulce in northern New Mexico. There have been many attempts to debunk knowledge of this installation, but there are too many individuals with too many baffling, frightening, and traumatic experiences in and around Dulce Base, who discount the debunking attempt.

There have been several efforts by civilians to run ground-penetrating radar (GPR) over the area. There is indication that GPR showed something huge underground, but security forces appear within ten or fifteen minutes, from somewhere, each time an attempt at GPR is made.

There is an eighty mile tunnel from Dulce to Los Alamos but security could not get there from Los Alamos in ten minutes unless it (they) teleported. Long story short, no one knows where the security force comes from, but they are a contingent of at least six individuals in combat-camouflage, well-armed, all with sunglasses and caps which have large, extended bills. They also have a “I take no funny stuff” attitude. I know, I was there.

GPR is relatively new technology which uses radar pulses to gain images of what is beneath the surface. GPR uses electromagnetic radiation in the UHF frequency (which is microwave band). A signal is reflected back from subsurface objects and structures. I myself was a part of one civilian group who came equipped with GPR. I felt that this scientific approach might render some real information.

After I was roughly escorted back to my parked car, I had a series of “things go wrong” for about a month. The area in front of my house was vandalized, it included the mailbox, a plaque with my last name and address which was made for me by one of my nephews, and my front yard flower-bed was torn up. Also, my television and Internet reception went amok, and there were several other pieces of “bad luck” in my life during this period. I knew I was warned. They knew where I lived and then some.

A sincere young man who experienced being down, inside the Dulce installation, made a recording with me and then disappeared. He left the country in a hurry. I will share the transcript with you, my readers.

AREA 51 AND 52:

Area 51 is America’s most infamous military installation. For decades, witnesses in that area have been seeing unusual craft hovering over the base. This is the place where top secret experiments, involving alien technology, are rumored to be taking place.

For 25 years, I have researched Area 51 and its “extensions” (Area 52 and possibly 53 and 54), interviewing a number of officials, personnel, and contract workers who have witnessed strange events, craft, and strange beings who are almost human but NOT.

Is the extraterrestrial technology at Area 51, and is Area 51 still viable, now that the public has at least an idea of the secret? The underground expansion of Area 51 now stretches through a series of tunnels, not only under Nelis Air Force Base in southern Nevada, but also stretches into areas of Utah and Arizona. Do other covert “areas” now exist adjacent to Area 51, wherein humankind’s extraterrestrial future is being prepared?

After decades of secrecy, denials and cover-ups, the CIA in Langley, Virginia, August 15, 2013, declassified documents which acknowledge the existence of a top secret military research facility known as Area 51. This was an historic announcement. Finally, these years of rumors that the UFO community and the conspiracy-community had been claiming to be true had been validated.

But many believe that in the darkest corners of southern Nevada lurks an even bigger secret; one that hides the ultimate evidence of extraterrestrial contact. While the admission that Area 51 existed was important, it didn’t go far enough for many people who were hoping that the government was going to confirm all the rumors about crashed UFOs and recovered alien technology were true. Of course, the government said nothing. They certainly appear to still be covering up major secrets.

Over the years, there have been a number of claims by people who have spoken up as whistle-blowers. They have exposed the fact that there is extraterrestrial technology at Area 51 and in its extended areas. Whistleblowers say that physicists and engineers have been hired to reverse engineer alien propulsion and related technology, which are far in advance of ours.

We also have rumors that there are alien spacecraft on the base that have actually been tested and flown. Apparently aliens themselves sometimes oversee these test flights by human pilots.

No wonder there are hundreds if not thousands of miles of tunnels, some newly built, which extend to what we call Area 52, 53, and 54. How do we know? Because we were able to use Ground Penetrating Radar (GPR) out in the middle of “nowhere” in southern Nevada, and receive clear readings of tunnels and buildings underneath the surface. My team and I had failed to get readings near Dulce because we were stopped by security forces; but, in Area 51, Nevada, we did succeed GPR mapping in “no man’s land” underneath which, there are large, well-built tunnels. We intended to continue mapping but were stopped when we returned several months later and threatened with arrest.

And so, I have much to share with you. I have previously unknown information and insights on all three of these mysterious and unholy installations. I call them “unholy” because they trod on the rights of citizens to know, to be told the truth, and they are using trillions of our dollars as they continue their insane, often cruel research. They victimize individuals with nary a “So sorry!” leaving people with nightmares and PTSD. They scare their victims who become either paranoid or justifiably scared to death by the threats they receive. This is indeed unholy behavior.

A word about the whistleblowers, informants, and contacts who are quoted in this book: It is my policy not to take the word of someone I have not interviewed personally. I get to know these people as best I can; they can be very protective of themselves, with good reason!

I respect several of the better-known books on Montauk, Dulce, or Area 51/52, but I seldom repeat the testimony of “someone” I’ve only heard about, second or third hand, who tells an account regarding their abduction or work experience at an installation, or knowledge in some way, about specific information.

Gruesome stories get passed along in the population which may have been told by a real person (or not), and in truth, we have no idea if they ever happened or if the facts are accurate.

It is my feeling that the wrong – the evil – which is done in these installations, is dimmed by over-the-top accounts, which an author has made no attempt to verify. Of course, usually there is no way to verify, but at least I attempt a one-on-one talk with this person. I also value accounts which are, in some way, verified by another person’s story. I value the apparent character of the person making the report and go by my impression of them as to whether they are “good enough” for my readers. By “good enough,” I mean, do I think or know that theirs is a valid report.

When it all becomes an urban legend, when no quality is pursued, it helps THEM (the installations and those doing evil in them).

No wonder the government pays people to be official debunkers; there are also paid, official tale-tellers, intended to muddy up the truth.

Please know that I feel strongly that any contact quote in this book, is telling the truth.

My final thought in this Introduction is, someday, wouldn't it be great to climb beautiful Mt. Archuleta, gaze down at the little town of Dulce, and know that the Installation is no longer there, the victims were freed and given help, the tunnels were collapsed, and IT is no-more!

CHAPTER ONE:

MONTAUK ORIGINS

Camp Hero or Montauk Point Air Force Base is on the tip of the north shore of Long Island, New York, is the location of experimentation into psychological warfare and other exotic technology and techniques kept top secret, including attempts at time travel. Also, reports include teleportation, mind control, and contact with extraterrestrial life.

The public began to consider that the tales they heard about the Montauk Project, were real because of the victims of experiments, who then bravely related what happened to them. Also, there appeared other evidence such as emerging information on the Philadelphia Experiment which plays a role in the origin of the clandestine research at Montauk.

THE PHILADELPHIA EXPERIMENT:

In January, 1980, I was on a baseball team of Navy men. I was stationed at Miramar Navy Air Station (now Miramar Marine Air Station). Miramar, near San Diego, was made famous by the film “Top Gun.” We played a local team from the nearby suburb of Mira Mesa and I got to talking with our umpire, a retired merchant seaman who had served aboard the SS Andrew Furuseth.

The SS Andrew Furuseth was a ship built for the United States Maritime Commission during World War II. It was one of 220 ships converted to carry a number of troops or prisoners of war during the war. Our baseball umpire, the retired merchant seaman who had served on the Furuseth in 1943, told me that the Eldridge just showed up out of nowhere and sat for some time in clear view of the men on the Furuseth.

Then the Eldridge vanished in a split second, in a flash of light. “None of us could believe our eyes for a second and then we all just stared at each other and muttered epithets,” he exclaimed. He added that a green glow surrounded the hull of the Eldridge just before it vanished.

This retired merchant seaman and I had conversed as we had a beer and tortillas after the game. I was mesmerized at his firsthand account. He was intelligent, well-versed, and sincere. He had no ulterior motives that I could ascertain. He did not pretend to have the entire story or to know the answers, he simply told me what he had witnessed.

Needless to say, this piqued my interest in the Philadelphia Experiment. The Montauk Installation had yet to play a role in my life except that I come from New York state and knew of it as a military base.

The USS Eldridge was a destroyer escort and is said to have been the subject of radical experiments by the Navy. The Navy denied this. A number of those who witnessed events spoke up to say that an experiment in invisibility (cloaking) not only happened but it was repeated that day of October 28, 1943. The second experiment teleported the Eldridge to Norfolk. This is where the men of the SS Furuseth saw it materialize, and then dematerialize.

The Eldridge then re-materialized back in Philadelphia where it had begun. This teleportation process involved time travel because the ship arrived ten minutes back in time.

I have never been able to find evidence or even a credible account that the Eldridge crew were impacted in bizarre, downright nightmarish situations due to all this. It is said that some went insane while others were fused together with the ship, but still alive. Their limbs were said to be sealed into the metal bulkheads. Of course, this has always been adamantly denied by the Navy. I am not sure and so I leave this aspect open. Perhaps someday the truth will be known.

The experiment was allegedly based on an aspect of the unified field theory, a term created by Albert Einstein to describe several theories which would aim to describe the interconnection between the forces of electromagnetism and gravity. It would unite these two forces into a single field. It would unite physics and quantum physics as having unified laws.

It is believed that researchers” thought that a version of this unified field would enable using large electrical generators to bend light around an object via refraction, so that the object became completely invisible. The Navy regarded this as of military value and it is said to have sponsored the experiment.

Another version of the reason for theses unprecedented experiments proposes that researchers were preparing magnetic and gravitational measurements of the seafloor to detect anomalies, based on Einstein's understanding of gravity. It is said that there were also related secret experiments in Nazi Germany to find anti-gravity, by the infamous Hans Kammler.

PROJECT RAINBOW:

Project Rainbow surfaced in 1947. Project Rainbow was an extension of the Philadelphia Experiment and no doubt sowed the seeds of Montauk. We can't be sure when one morphed into the other.

Project Rainbow was funded to continue research into the exotic phenomena encountered on the USS Eldridge and was particularly concerned with electromagnetic technology. Dr. John von Neumann, who worked on the Manhattan Project during World War Two, was chosen to head up this new research. The budget included other researchers as well, with von Neumann in charge. They were to find out how to protect humans within an electromagnetic field so vessels and crews could be transported through space and time, hopefully without harm to either.

Dr. von Neumann, was a German theoretical physicist. He excelled in advanced theories of space-time, including attempts to find the key to the unified field theory. Earlier in his career, he had built the first vacuum tube computer at Princeton University. He also acted as the link between Einstein and engineers serving on Project Rainbow.

Von Neumann soon realized he needed to educate himself in metaphysics to do this job. Electromagnetics and metaphysical phenomena are strangely related. The Philadelphia Experiment had disassembled the physical and biological molecules of human beings. Crew members had melded with bulkheads and changed beyond recognition. Those who had survived were quite mad or died later from utter madness and/or some strange internal burning.

Project Rainbow physicists, engineers, and other scientists worked for ten years, trying to figure out why human beings had experienced disfunction and even madness due to electromagnetic fields that took them to different times and spaces. Most likely, they figured that, humans are born with what is known as a “time reference point.” At conception, a human being (and any energy being) is attached to a timeline and thus must manifests as flesh from that point onward.

Metaphysics enters into it because it is necessary to view the “energy being” or soul as separate from the physical body. So, our essence as both a physical and metaphysical being appears to have its origin in the timeline inherent in the electromagnetic background of Earth. This time reference (timeline) is the basic focus point to the way the universe functions. This is connected to time always seeming to flow in one direction – the forward arrow of time - at least to our limited senses.

But the technology discovered by Project Rainbow, creates an alternate reality having its existence entirely within a quantum field or reality. It can teleport or transfer material objects from our time and space and into another reality. This accounts for the invisibility of the USS Eldridge and her crew. The Navy had already used crewmen as guinea pigs but the actual scientific theory for why this could happen, was developed AFTER the human guinea pigs were already experimented on, in the Philadelphia Project aboard the USS Eldridge.

The alternate reality created by the timeline shift, has no time reference because it is not part of the normal forward flow of time. In a sense, it is a loop in time. For the person who is experiencing this phenomenon with no previous awareness or explanation of it, there would be an intense and enduring nightmare wherein nothing made any sense.

PROJECT PHOENIX:

Engineers suggested allowing test subjects into and out of the quantum field by connecting them to a time reference they could recognize as the Earth. When they were in the alternate reality, they had to be “armed” mentally and emotionally with something that would give them a “real time” reference.

Test subjects would believe they were still in Earth “real-time.” All the required natural background information of the Earth created for the test subjects, a continuous stream of Earth time. Therefore, the energy of the other dimension (alternate reality) would not be perceived. Test subjects would believe they were still in Earth “real-time.” Enter Project Phoenix!

Dr. John von Neumann was the ideal man for the Phoenix Project. He knew computers would have to be used if they were going to calculate the time references of specific people and replicate those references while they were in the quantum field, otherwise the test subjects would be experiencing essentially “no reality” or a continuous nightmare reality at best. The computer had to be programmed to generate an electromagnetic background with which the test subjects could harmonize and synch with.

Otherwise, the soul and the physical body’s reference points to space-time would not be synchronized, resulting in dissolution and insanity and the inability to return to physical Earth, real time. Because they were dealing with two separate and distinct entities: the astral (spiritual) human and the physical human, the timeline would be required to lock in the spirit and the electromagnetic background would be required to lock in the body.

The work of Project Rainbow, which was begun in 1947 but continued to expand under the name Project Phoenix, continued during the heart of the Vietnam conflict. Its work was groundbreaking and mind-boggling (literally).

HUMAN GUINEA PIGS:

What of their guinea pig humans? The scientists’ philosophy was not to harm their subjects, but when dealing with matters of the soul and with the individual’s reference point to reality itself, we can conclude that the research was abusive and dangerous to those who were paid a pittance to participate. This disregard for the individual’s welfare continued into Montauk.

When the project's first phase was complete in 1967, a report was submitted to the Congressional committee from which funds had been appropriated. It was explained to Congress that the consciousness of man could definitely be affected by electromagnetism and that it would be possible to develop electronic hardware and software that could literally change the way a person thinks in a basic way.

The seeds of mind control had been planted.

The Congressional committee refused to give more funding and Project Rainbow (which had changed its name to Project Phoenix), was disbanded in 1969.

However, the scientists and engineers at Brookhaven had spent too much time, effort and money to just walk away. They were obsessed with their own strange discoveries. This seemed to be the key to control and power. Their empire was in place, the technology was secure, and they felt they had a mission, be it for ill or good.

A secret agency which was "off the books" had to be found to fund them in their mind control experiments. The military seemed the most logical place for "black ops" and off the books funding. The seeds of Montauk were sprouting, eventually there would need to be an expanded top-secret location to carry on the mind control and other abominations.

The scientists let the military know that a device had been developed that would totally change the way people, and especially soldiers, think and act, certain military men were enthusiastic. Such a device could not only change the outcome of a battle or of a war itself, but it could manipulate the thinking of entire populations. With this device, one could convince the enemy's populace that they did not want to fight and that war was not a necessity for young men.

CONTROLLING THE WEATHER:

Let us leave the mind control trail for a moment and examine a parallel project of the Phoenix scientists, which involved extensive research on controlling the weather. Apparently, they figured they could discover the key to controlling both Man and Weather!

Years later, when talking to Montauk personnel who would sometimes eat lunch in the town of Montauk, I learned that the Montauk Installation was also researching how to control the weather and climate. I heard this only once from a Montauk engineer, but he had no reason to be lying, and he refused to say another word about it. He was a bonified engineer down in Montauk, I double-checked that. Since weather control is documented to have been researched by Project Phoenix, it makes sense that it was carried through to later years at the Montauk Installation.

In 1947, secret U.S. projects began research into the control of weather. This was called the Phoenix Project. Phoenix and the Rainbow Projects soon enough got intermingled and while those working on them at the time might have known the difference, it is impossible now, with the limited data we can dig up, to separate them.

The original theory for Project Phoenix was developed from data provided earlier by Austrian scientist Dr. Wilhelm Reich. Most of his research data was burned by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration and if there are copies, they are hidden and next to impossible to find.

ORGONE ENERGY:

Dr. Reich was known for his discovery of a force he called “orgone” energy. He isolated and confirmed its existence which, he also referred to as “life energy,” in his lab. He got into trouble with medical authorities when he claimed his control of the “waveform nature of cosmic ether” cured cancer. To make such a claim in the 1940s was to fall into professional disgrace automatically, and this happened.

Reich’s orgone energy itself was kindred to the Newtonian concept of “the ether” and it was not a huge innovative discovery. This was a known theory of Newton’s. Reich would have been wise not to stray into the field of claiming to cure cancer. His work on modifying and controlling the weather was connected to the “orgone” within a storm. Orgone (life energy) exists in every biological being and every bit of cosmic space, said Dr. Reich. Using his orgone generator, he was able to create electromagnetic force fields, and reduce the severity of storms.

Dr. Reich made a mistake when he reported his discovery and his storm-lessening skill, to the government. They had been closely watching him anyway and knew what he had accomplished. They asked for, and received, all his innovative equipment and research documentation, and promptly used the information to advance their weather research.

In the 1950s, Reich's basic "orgone buster" research combined with something called the radio meteorograph produced the devices now known as radiosondes. Balloons were sent into the atmosphere with this science aboard.

It was claimed weather balloons were only monitoring the weather, but it is nearly certain they had no receivers aboard. So they were not "just reporting," and in fact, they were not "reporting" at all. Devices carried by the balloons were involved in changing the weather with the hope of controlling it. This was kept secret for over forty years with their effort of disinformation and lies.

Radiosondes might have nullified really bad storms in the eastern United States, we are not certain of that, but there was a negative potential to target various communities, military installations, factories, anywhere they wanted, with devastatingly severe storms.

It is difficult to prove but a possible example of weather control being used to create anomalous weather, is the storm which hit the joint RAFB/USAFB Woodbridge-Bentwaters military base, just north of London. In 1987, that base was partially destroyed by a violent storm which was likely man-made. Never has there been such a storm in that area before or since. Lush tracts of lovely trees in the forest on and near the base were literally pulled out by the roots. It was a localized storm of great intensity, a disaster which saddens the citizens of the area to this day.

RAF Bentwaters was the location of a well-known nighttime radar event involving UFOs. There were also visual witnesses to this "Lakenheath-Bentwaters Incident." And, of course, in December 1980, was the famous “Rendlesham Forest Incident.” Rendlesham Forest is, or was, right next to Bentwaters Base which stored U.S. nuclear weapons for many years.

How do these events line up? Why destroy the entire area in 1987? We are obviously missing important information and should not guess. After the U.S. Air Force left the base, it closed down in 1993.

CHAPTER TWO:
MONTAUK REALITIES

I was aware of rumors that a top-secret facility, partly underground, had been added to Camp Hero around 1972. I was investigating UFO sightings and events in my spare time, which was sparse. I had a demanding position in a busy company and a family. Those rumors came to national prominence in the late 1970s.

Phoenix Project had been defunded officially; however, the intelligence community had discovered mind control. Therefore, the title was changed but the mission (the pursuit), went on. THIS is Montauk's legacy.

At the point in time of 1972, I cannot tell you if the former Phoenix Project's scientists were stationed at Montauk, Brookhaven, or elsewhere, but Montauk security measures were extremely high and there was an intensity and downright evil in the air regarding the Point Montauk base, in the entire area. We all felt it for nine or ten years.

Research into teleportation, telepathy, levitation, weather control, mind control, and attempted journeys backward and forward in time, continued with new zeal. The results of the experiments aboard the USS Eldridge, disastrous as they might have been at the time, provided data for a series of programs and black projects which consume a large portion of America's military budget even today.

THE PARANORMAL:

In the beginning, one facet of The Montauk Project was exploration into paranormal activity. I heard stories around town of military men and civilian scientists invading a local house which was said to have poltergeist activity. One person assured me that the military had permission from the owners of the house and were paid to allow entrance. Of course, my next question was, "What happened?" No one knew, and so this story never went anywhere but the paranormal aspect to it, is intriguing.

The military was well aware that the Soviets were involved in paranormal research, too. In the late 1980s, the CIA had taken over Stanford University's Remote Viewing Project which had begun in the 1970s.

Also, beginning in the late 1970s, the Princeton Engineering Anomalies Research Lab (PEAR) carried out extensive research on remote viewing. The military became more involved with this project by 1989. It was realized that if psychically sensitive individuals could be found (ESPers) whose powers were strong enough, they could nullify Soviet ESPers and perhaps overpower them. This would give the U.S. an incredible super-weapon

The Brookhaven group as well as the elite academic institutions just mentioned, as well as other universities worldwide, were all gung-ho into paranormal research. Many projects involved use the use of hallucinogens. Montauk was certainly one of these, as my Cousin Megan can testify to. I will share her testimony with you in a moment.

Some experiments mixed hallucinogenic drugs with electromagnetic fields. EM energy had certainly been involved in the Philadelphia Experiment and was known as an integral part of paranormal research. Test subjects became more and more expendable. The military put pressure on the scientists to produce results, and the scientists were indeed excited as they delved deep into new and exotic research.

Test subjects would be in terrible mental and emotional condition when they returned to the community. It is very possible that several of them never returned; there were "my brother is missing" accounts (or my sister, my father, and so on), and as far as I know, these missing people were never found.

The test subjects who returned had PTSD and several were actually dangerous. They would be normal and then in the blink of an eye, become violent or really insane. They were never reimbursed, never offered counseling or medical help to my knowledge. At least two of them whom I knew, ended up in prison and I assume there are or were, more.

What was it that the Montauk experimenters were doing? Investigation had revealed that telepathic waves, while not radio waves, behaved in similar ways to radio waves, and could be controlled with equipment. Scientists celebrated because they had discovered electromagnetic functions unlike anything ever known before.

But what of the test subjects? They became more and more the victims of it all. The subjects gave their mind power but it was as if they were the horse, and the winning jockeys took all the credit.

The projects were funded by the military, which of course then expected to control them. Results of experiments and other data were stored in locked rooms at secret bases, and so people like me, and people like you, can only piece it all together. The public was and is unaware of most of this.

I am sure all this is true even today, because Montauk is still very active. It is simply below ground and can only be accesses underground. It is more difficult by far today, to discover information about what is going on.

MIND CONTROL:

Out of Montauk research came the information that certain radio frequencies in the 410-420 MHz range could block human thought patterns, leaving test subjects unable to think straight or perform tasks. From 1972 until 1983, fluctuating electromagnetic frequencies were beamed toward thousands of U.S. citizens in a number of New England communities.

These waves could alter thoughts and even minds. They caused an increase in murders and crime. They encouraged teenagers to rebel; teenagers' brains are not yet fully developed, and there was a unique frequency which took advantage of this. There were reports of crowds gathering but not knowing why, and then suddenly they would disperse, in complete confusion. When the beamed-in EM frequency was turned off, people returned to normal.

Other manipulation of minds and reality itself, happened. Wild animals, often groups of them, would suddenly charge into town and crash through windows. This happened in three towns that I know of.

It snowed in August across a part of upstate New York. Hurricane force winds suddenly came from nowhere and as quickly subsided. Thunderstorms with bad lightning and huge balls of hail would appear and vanish when there was no weather forecast or anything indicating bad weather.

While they were primarily interested in altering the moods and behavior of test subjects, scientists involved in this project discovered they could send out controlled frequencies to produce specific thought patterns and mood swings. They then beamed those frequencies to many places in New England. They had monitoring personnel in the town being attacked (and it was an attack), with gear which protected them from the frequencies. Those tests produced the results already discussed.

However, they discovered that when the equipment was operating, the mood of everyone at the facility would change also. From this they concluded that the person did not have to be in the direct path of the frequencies to be influenced by the mind control. They had themselves a doorway into the human mind. Next on the agenda was to how to alter the mind permanently.

We can only ask, what in the universe is Montauk doing these days, in the third decade of the 21st Century?

Tragically, several people died of massive brain hemorrhages during the early tests when exposed to long periods of these exotic frequencies of electromagnetic energy. They found “cures” for this and then began putting together a data base of pulses and frequencies. By 1972, they had developed a (usually) nonlethal technology and began using it on military personnel and nearby communities.

From these methods and frequencies came the first ideas and possible mechanics of “time-tripping” which would be used later to purposefully send test subjects out of Earth’s time-space.

By about 1975, this broad range of mind control was in full swing with a comprehensive database covering a broad range of cause and effect. Also they had powerful transmitters which they needed to beam their subliminal transmissions over a large area of the northeast of the United States of America.

This pulse, if heard above the usual noise, sounds like a diesel engine running on idle a mile or two away. It is at the low level of human hearing. When directed at automobiles, certain pulses could cause engines to stop running and electrical instruments to malfunction. In some instances, a pulse which Soviet experiments discovered, was sent to the people of New England. This frequency sounds like a “woodpecker” at the 5Hz to 8Hz range of shortwave radios. The low frequency which sounds like a diesel on idle, has been heard from Taos, New Mexico to the Seattle, Washington, as well as the New England area.

By the early 1980s, Montauk scientists possessed a device which allowed them access to the human mind, with the ability to manipulate it. This was indeed a super-weapon. Funds poured in from secret, private sources and individuals.

Wealthy supporters expected to obtain huge financial benefits from the new mind-control technology. There was also the sale of hardware and software; others would make a fortune from sale of machines to the military. It seems they did not think of the people who would be the victims of this monstrous technology and/or they did not care.

TIME TRIPPING:

But the most incredible, powerful discovery was still to come. While they were working on thought control, the scientists stumbled onto “time-tripping.”

Money was poured into the research, upgraded equipment costing a small fortune was readily supplied, facilities were improved and enlarged. New Cray hybrid computers were installed to decode messages from the brains of test subjects. One of my contacts worked for Cray Computers and was enlisted in helping deliver and install these computers at Montauk. As with many other contacts who had a small bit to offer regarding Montauk, he was just plain scared to say any more than that he did deliver and install the most advanced Cray computers available below ground level, at Montauk.

Researchers could hear and see what was going on inside the minds of their test subjects who often were given a small amount of money, which they often needed. So, the test-subjects were the financially impoverished or those in need of a quick boost of money, but they ended up selling their precious minds and sanity for a paltry bit of cash.

Researchers could join in and record running dialogues in the minds of their human guinea pigs. They could vary pulses to change the test subject's thoughts and ascertain what the effect was produced. Eventually, the translator was changed into a transmitter; the thoughts of one test subject could then be transmitted to other test subjects.

In this way the subject involved in "time tripping" would have a "real time" reference to present time Earth, like an umbilical cord to reality. This reference was found to be necessary so time-trippers would not become lost in the quantum field which might produce images so vastly alien that they would cause insanity to the time-tripping subject.

But the "dreamers" or "scanners" could not always lock onto images and hold them for long periods of time and several time-trippers were lost before the "real time" images were converted to computer images that could be locked on for indefinite periods. If this happened, the individual's mind was lost in a zombie oblivion and sometimes could not be brought back.

At this point in Montauk's bizarre research, and with the aid of the Cray and IBM computers and the new "virtual reality" imaging technology, time-tripping became possible without the dangers inherent in the earlier systems which used human scanners who were then unable to generate continuous images to those traveling through the quantum field.

Theoretically, time moves in one direction only: forward. There are, however, very subtle shifts in time that most people cannot detect and of which only very astute and sensitive people are aware. One of these subtle shifts is the phenomenon of deja vu or "second view." As well, there are glitches in time which a few people can sense; sometimes a "sensitive" individual loses several hours or gains several hours for no known reason.

Another twist in time which some individuals can master, is precognition or viewing events in another time, before they happen in this time. They are, as far as I can determine, good evidence that some people have existed in more than one time in the same lifetime and that the friends we gather here, are gathered there as well. I suspect this construct would be a parallel universe since things there are as familiar as they are here, however, I am not certain in which of the realities the events actually occur first.

Once the quirks of time shifts and “scanners not locking on a reality” problems had been solved with advanced computers, the Montauk personnel could conjure up a “pseudo-time” that would tie the time travelers to an Earth reality. This “umbilical cord” would keep them from getting lost and allow them to find their way back through the quantum vortex being generated at the facility.

But, because the computers could now generate virtual reality images that appeared real and solid, the scientists realized they could project or broadcast them. Their test-subjects had no idea about virtual reality existing back in these days, and so they were fed images of creatures and machines which they believed were really interacting with them. Often great fear was generated from this procedure.

These images were particularly apparent to people who had more than normal sensory perception (“sensitives”) and, the scientists were able to compile a small list of gifted ESPers who generally incorrectly translate virtual images as real, solid objects, and then pass these images on to non-sensitive people. This mind control through intermediary ESPers), has been actively conducted since about 1975 or 1976 and accounts for some reports of alien abduction. These are cases attributed to actual abduction by military or federal intelligence agencies for medical or psychological research. It was in fact virtual reality which passed as real in human brains.

Other projects were born of this new technology and were employed by different intelligence agencies during the cold war to find submarines, underground facilities of the enemy, and other “cold” secrets. The purpose of the new technology being used on American citizens is to control thoughts in their minds to make them do things they would not ordinarily do, including murder, suicide, madness, or simply spending lots of money and purchasing items they do not want and cannot use.

By 1984, as predicted by George Orwell, Big Brother was inside your head. The double tragedy was and is that you didn’t even know it. This phenomenon might still hold true today.

After the electromagnetic fields and computer- generated images were refined and perfected, the Phoenix Project scientists began conducting a series of comprehensive tests to determine how effective their subliminal transmission were on the general population.

By 1980 they were transmitting mental images of hairy anthropoid creatures, flying saucers and grey aliens across a large area of North America. All the while they compiled vast databases and continuously altered frequencies and programs. Other departments were creating storms and hurricanes and causing floods and blizzards as they perfected their weather machines to be used (this was the plan), as weapons of war.

However, Americans were their abused test subjects, and so they hurt the citizens they said they were protecting by creating exotic weapons of war. It was American minds and spirits which they tortured and damaged. Their unholy war was against their own people, as it turned out. Most certainly from 1980 until the present time, this war is still being waged; Montauk never closed down.

In 1980, an artificial (virtual) event occurred before it was transmitted; and other virtual events were observed hours or days after they were broadcast. These unbelievable observations led the scientists and engineers to conclude that the broadcast frequencies were getting lost in time and were being shifted or rebroadcast sooner or later than they should have been.

They dug into this oddity and it revealed that time was indeed, shifting. By tracing the cause of the shift, they were ultimately able to isolate and control the moment and duration of the shift. They had, by accident, discovered how to manipulate or “bend” time.

Their advanced equipment was barely adequate to track the time shifting, so they demanded and obtained brand new cutting edge new electronic devices, more powerful than before. By surrounding their test subjects with powerful electromagnetic fields, they were able to create the effect produced aboard the USS Eldridge those many years ago, but with a great deal more control.

QUANTUM PORTAL:

They had found the portal into the quantum world and eagerly explored it, discovering in rapid succession, null time in which all things solid and ethereal, exist at one and the same moment in all planes of existence. Negative time (past); present time; positive time (future) and proof of parallel universes also having their own past, present and future times. It was into this vast unknown quantum field the scientists intended to project their human test subjects.

Immediately there were problems. People vanished and were never retrieved from the vortex. They appeared to have fallen into the rabbit hole and not found their way out again. There had been instances of losses before this, but nothing like this “unified field” disaster for which scientists were responsible.

“Real time” links were devised which would serve as a lifeline for the time trippers, allowing them to find the portals which would return them to present Earth time and space. It established a “zero time” or beginning and ending reference for the travelers.

They worried about losing their gifted psychics and sensitives during this time, so they began to take homeless people, pay them a minimal amount, and project them into the vortex. If they were lost, no one would even miss them. If they returned, they had to relate their mind-boggling experiences.

Some were projected into the vortex again for additional tests. When they outlived their usefulness or if the scientists feared they might remember what happened and tell someone else, they were given powerful drugs which deleted their memories. A few of them might have had their link to the portal shut down; in other words, their umbilical cord to safety and sanity, was cut. Hundreds of people may have been lost in this manner.

Once the zero-time links were perfected and programmed into the computers, the human psychics in the loop were deemed unnecessary and they were taken out, primarily because they were unable to consistently lock in the real time images required to maintain the link between this time and “other” time. The project was now totally controlled by vast electromagnetic generators and computers.

Most of the base personnel who had not succumbed to the project, were transferred to other assignments. New units arrived to guard and maintain the base. Civilian participation was reduced and many of the psychics were cut loose. Many of them simply disappeared, others got heavily into addictive drugs or alcohol.

Between 1981 and 1983, I am told a large number of successful, if mostly tentative, excursions had been made forward and backward through time in parallel and alternate universes as well as projections back and forth in earth time.

It is likely that during the trips back into earth time, a number of significant historic political events were altered. I have interviewed several people on such topics as the John and Robert Kennedy assassinations, the Martin Luther King assassination, the shooting of Ronald Reagan, and on the events of September 11, 2001. I am not prepared to offer specifics at this time because that would be irresponsible. I have heard similar accounts from five people who might have actual knowledge. I hope to offer more on this topic at some future date.

It is interesting to note that, while hours or even months might pass while they were performing tasks in the alternate or parallel time, it is claimed that the trippers almost always returned to the exact moment they left Earth’s real time. To the casual observer, they would have appeared not to have gone anywhere at all.

“There was not,” claimed one scientist, “more than a slight bending of light rays to indicate the test jumpers had gone into the vortex. They reappeared, after having performed tasks for weeks, in the next second."

The project, sophisticated as it was by the early 1980s, was apparently not without danger. If the power fluctuated or was off, a tripper would be abandoned in the quantum vortex. As well, a large number of these trippers did not return to present day earth and it is to be assumed that theirs was a one-way mission through time. They were not expected to return and, indeed, must have agreed not to.

Possibly, the trippers were sent through the vortex to terraform a distant planet or, perhaps, to colonize another world such as the moon or Mars. It is likely that the vast distances of outer space were not relevant to time-tripping which, by using certain quantum fields, bypassed any distances as "not real."

Several sources have indicated to me that manned landings were made on Mars as early as 1962 and there is some evidence to suggest that the first large group of colonists arrived on Mars and the lunar surface through time-tripping. One informant named the Brookhaven group specifically as well as mentioning Montauk Point.

To understand time, one must remember that "time" as a thing does not actually exist. "Time" is the orderly progression of events occurring only in the mind of the observer and only within the limits of the particular universe in which they are manifest. These same (or similar) events may also occur at the same moment in a parallel universe. If the observer was projected suddenly into the parallel universe, he might not even be aware that a shift had occurred, except that he might experience some vertigo or an episode of Deja vu. Generally, these episodes are resolved with a shake of the head or a shrug of the shoulders.

The observer appears to be in his own real time and continues with his life as if he were. He is totally unaware that a time shift occurred or that he was momentarily in the vortex. These sudden and unexplained shifts may have no direct impact on one's future. On the other hand, they may have profound effects on all of humankind, for the act of changing the timeline of a single person is tantamount to changing everyone's timeline.

The alternate future, once established, becomes fixed until or unless someone goes into the vortex to tamper with it again. Because the timeline has already been altered, first accidentally with the Philadelphia Experiment and then purposefully by Montauk, we find ourselves in a time lock in which everything appears to be progressing normally but is, in fact, progressing through altered time. Events are getting away from us. Our control over normal chores diminishes. Events occur for which there are no logical answers. The weather has gone haywire. People have gone mad and the prisons are full to overflowing.

We've jumped sideways and now we are having trouble finding our way back. Where is that umbilical cord? Those who time-traveled to the future came back predicting the year 2021 as the beginning of the end time. Those who went farther found only desolation. What do they know that we don't?

And I have reason to know that Montauk still in existence. It simply, quite literally, went underground.

MONTAUK DECOMMISSIONED IN 1981?

When Montauk Point was officially closed down, we civilians of the area were astounded. Did the conspiracy-like rumors which had flourished and grown since the 1970s, get to be too much for them? Did they feel their secrecy and security was blown?

The citizens of Montauk kept a watchful eye on the roads leading away from the installation; there was no parade of U-hauls or military vehicles lined up to transport them elsewhere. There were some papers and similar non-pertinent items left behind and local cleaning people were hired to go into the old facility to clean up. The clean-up brigade reportedly found some of the personnel information left behind had hand-written scrawls simply saying, "GONE!" Rumors started that these were Montauk test subjects who were sent through time but who got "lost" in oblivion at some point. There is no way to confirm or disprove this, but it is fact that Montauk was abandoned, closed down, in a big hurry with odd remnants left behind.

THEY NEVER LEFT!

It seems almost certain that Montauk scientists, engineers and military cohorts, did not leave at all, but that an extensive new underground installation was completed, and they simply moved Montauk, underground. Entrances and exits exist only underground and Montauk still functions today, doing its evil research.

I wish to give my deepest gratitude to contacts and informants who had the courage to speak with me, some giving interviews, others merely offering a few words. I purposely have not described them personally, such as “He is a college graduate in computer technology who works for a large company…” I do not want to give any hints as to their identities and what I have just described, describes none of them. They gave me pieces of an ugly and yet intriguing puzzle and I have put that puzzle together carefully and as best I could.

I will now share with you, word for word, account my second cousin Megan bravely put on audio tape. She was literally kidnapped from her backyard a few miles from Montauk Point (Camp Hero). The date was October 9, 1980. Two months later, she was taken by them again and disappeared for nearly a week right at Christmas time.

Megan suffered, her family suffered. They thought she might never return from wherever and whatever had taken her again. When she did return, she had severe PTSD and suffered from bouts of clinical depression. Megan died in the 1990s of ovarian cancer in her mid-60s.

CHAPTER THREE:
MEGAN'S EXPERIENCE
AT MONTAUK

"Ah, where do I begin? I was always the one in my family who thought they saw a UFO or who knew for sure there was a monster under the bed. I still think there was a monster under my bed who could disappear quickly," (Megan laughs).

"I had two older brothers but I actually was less scared of weird stuff than they were. It's just that I knew it was there and they didn't. I guess it was more familiar to me than the boys. Anyway, for about a year and a half before I was kidnapped by Montauk, I saw a total of four UFOs over our house or in our vicinity.

During this time also, a door in our house decided to open and close whenever it wanted. It had always been a well-behaved door before that (she laughs). What I mean is, there was some poltergeist-like activity, glasses toppled over, papers would fly off the table when the windows were closed, so no wind blowing, and silly stuff like that."

"My husband and kids didn't really notice these things and only me thought of a poltergeist. I never said anything to them, why get them scared? I must add that I have no idea if the UFOs and the weird stuff had anything to do with what happened to me. I don't see why it would be connected but I just feel I should mention it."

(On this cassette tape she recorded, Megan was ok until she began at this point to delve into what happened to her. She began to cry, sobbing often in that serious "heaving" kind of way. She would regain composure before continuing and so what she says is very clear).

"It was a Thursday morning, must've been around 10:00. Brad (her husband) was at work and my kids (she had 2 children) were in school, thank goodness. It was a bit chilly but I wanted to still hang the clothes outside. I always did that when the weather allowed. I had my back turned to our laneway when I heard the sound of a car, crunching its wheels along on the gravel. I turned around and saw a dark blue SUV with several people in it. I saw they were men when they jumped out really quickly. I had my mouth open to say, “Hi, can I help you?” when they shoved me once, shoved me again right up against their car, then forced me into the back seat.

I was screaming and kicking by that time. I remember my thought whizzing past, “Who will get the kids from school this afternoon, then?”

“The car was too much heated, I felt nauseated. I saw them, 3 of them, jumping back into the car, one was right beside me and he smelled like Vicks Cough drops. They must have tranquilized me somewhere in all that because the next thing I knew was, I was in a small room which had a single bed, it was made up properly, a pitcher of water and a glass were on a small dresser.

No windows. I was totally confused and frightened, I was getting a bad headache, I was terribly thirsty but thought, “What if the water is poison? And I thought over and over, “Who the hell are these crazy people? Why did I, of all people, get kidnapped? “Are they going to kill me?” It was probably late afternoon when there was a knock at the door and a woman dressed in a blouse and skirt, let herself in. She was maybe 50, very plain looking, she had short brown hair. I don’t remember all she said, it is a jumble but I do remember she said I was to “help with some important work,” and “It’s ok to be scared but you don’t need to be. We feel you have a skill which will help our work.”’

“I swore at her, every cuss word in the book, basically saying, “How dare you?” and “Get me outa here!” She was there maybe ten minutes, she left a Big Mac and French fries in a McDonald’s take-out bag, I thought that was really weird, and left saying, “Get some sleep.”

I got no sleep. I looked for some kind of trick passageway or something, there was nothing like that. The door was a heavy door and locked. I spent the night wide awake, terrified, literally shaking and trembling.”

“The woman brought me breakfast next day which I think was also McDonald’s. Then I was led by three guards and her, as if I was a dangerous prisoner, down a corridor in what was obviously an institution or military base or something like that, to a room which had a military older man with medals on his uniform, and a male psychiatrist about 35, glasses, light brown hair.

I can remember details like that, but that is BEFORE they injected me with something terrible, I think this was LSD but they gave me something even worse later on. I do remember I was being held down, I was resisting as hard as I could." (Megan sobs again). "From here, I have no idea how much time passed, except I was told later I had been gone five days. The LSD or whatever it was, took hold in probably 15 minutes but I do remember, in the meantime they quickly forced me sign a paper which said, 'Confidentiality Agreement.' That was so stupid of them, as if this was something legal in the first place! The drug was taking hold, which they knew, so I just signed the paper. Twenty minutes earlier, I would not have."

"The nurse – that woman – I'll call her "the nurse" had been the one to actually inject me. I hate her the most. Twenty minutes later I felt a rush of heat in my stomach and noticed that the wall had waves like the oceans. I could not understand how that could be, but they were good-sized bright yellow waves where the yellow wall had been.

The waves had very black things darting in and out of them, like cartoon fish. The waves began to rise higher and higher, as if defying gravity. I was then ecstatic for some reason, celebrating this waving wall which was out of control now, threatening to engulf us all. I burst out in a mighty satanic, witchy laugh."

"I believe this was a trial run to see how I reacted to a large injection of LSD. During this session I think they showed me things, playing cards, pictures, they asked me things, maybe they were testing my psi ability? I have no idea really. I think I was like a naughty kid, I was seeing all these cartoonish people. The nurse had turned into a really ugly cartoon witch. I know I wandered into my head for hours and did not even relate to them.

I assume they were still there or watching from some other room. If I had my senses back, I would have intentionally tried to flunk any "psi skills" test but I had no control over my mind at all. Do you know how traumatizing that is? I had the predictable synesthesia experiences, smelling the color red, and other colors, but red was a terrible experience. At one point I was given paints. After a while, I remember one of their male voices saying sarcastically, “Well, acid doesn’t make one a better painter, does it?”

“But, they must’ve given me more drug or a different drug because then my awareness buckled and came only in flashes, brief snapshots of horrific scenarios. My memory is so sketchy. What I still flash back to, is that I thought they had kidnapped my son, Bobby, and were slowly torturing him to death. As his mother who loves him so much, I would try to stop them but had no ability to affect reality. My hand would reach out but not touch anything, nothing solid. I was there, suffering with Bobby, but I was not there. I could not help him. I have flashbacks on this and other terrible episodes which took place, apparently, all in my mind, but they have had an impact on me as if they had really happened. What a cruel, vicious thing to do to someone!”

“Five days later, I know now it was five days, I found myself crumpled - sitting- on a large stone in our yard. I was, I guess, schizophrenic. Poor Brad, I know I was hard to deal with at first. I wouldn’t go to a doctor and really needed a psychiatrist, but I felt that would take me right back to them with their psychiatrist-guy.

As time went by, I would have agreed to go for help but those Montauk maniacs came back and grabbed me again Brad had to go to work, the kids had to go to school, so I cringed at home, fearing them. I was right to fear them.”

“How do I know they were located within Montauk? I heard them say it this several times, they were not very tight-lipped. They were cocky, arrogant. And they showed up again, two months after I got back. This time I tried to run, I gouged my knee on a branch. But there I was, again.”

“I heard one of them say I was a “minimal candidate” but apparently worth a try. I think this time they tried to send me time-tripping, as they called it. I think this is who they were looking for, a good time tripper. This was the worst experience of all because there was nothing – nothing – in my mind. I didn't even exist. I had no connection to this world or time or anything or anyone."

(Megan speaks to author Martin T. Dooley): "Martin, you have said Montauk scientists would send people time-tripping from our quantum whatever, to another quantum whatever, but that if you didn't have your life-line umbilical cord which was your link back to Earth and all you know, you would be lost in oblivion, maybe forever. I believe that happened to me but somehow, I was able to find my cord, to feel my way in the fog, back to my lifeline, and I got myself back. This is a tremendous source of strength for me, I saved myself, I got myself back! I beat them! I feel so bad for those time trippers who got lost forever, I know that could happen."

"They apparently labeled me as no good at time tripping, and have not bothered me since. It has been, what, fifteen years now? Brad and I have moved 20 miles away from Montauk, we didn't move further away because of extended family in the New York area. My children are grown but we are still a close-knit family."

"Montauk is supposed to be closed but I know they just moved the damn evil thing underground and to somewhere else."

"As for me, I think they wondered if I had psi ability and in the end, they decided I didn't – or not enough. Thank God! If I had more psi ability, I know I would never have gotten home ever again." (Megan's audio tape ends here).

CHAPTER FOUR:
THE TUNNELS BETWEEN
2 HELLS

My theory is simple: Montauk began the insanity and Dulce Base in northern New Mexico, now joins in the evil that is created.

It has bothered me for years that Montauk now apparently has only underground entrances and exists. I have pondered, “Is there a secret tunnel system which goes from the south shore of Long Island all the way to northern New Mexico? Remember, Megan exclaimed, “…they just moved the damn evil thing underground and to somewhere else.” That is a seeming contradiction but maybe not!

I have since researched the possibility of a military tunnel system which has branches under every state, every area, of the country, and beyond the U.S. as well. I wish I had absolute proof to show you, but it is next to impossible to obtain. I did invest, along with two close friends, in a ground penetrating radar machine which looks rather like an old fashioned “push” lawn mower. None of us are wealthy and our investment amounted to over $9,000 each.

Needless to say, two of our three wives were very unhappy about that. The sad truth is, we cannot push our Ground Penetrating Radar (GPR) “mower” across country from Montauk Point, New York, to Dulce, New Mexico, mapping a tunnel all the way.

On top of that, military tunnels are deep underground and no doubt cloaked. I have talked with soldiers who tell of vast tunnels, well lit, with all the facilities of an above ground installation. Their testimonies will be offered in this chapter.

First, I would like to share with you some of the information I have collected over the years.

FROM GEORGE KNAPP’S MYSTERY WIRE:

As government scientists and funds literally shoot for the stars, with NASA missions and the new Space Force, other major programs are heading the other way … into the Earth.

Conspiracy theorists have long wondered what facilities exist underground. Secret bases, perhaps? Hardened shelters to protect the elite in government and industry in the event of catastrophic events on the surface? How much of that is true? It turns out, a lot of it.

From the Mystery Wire archives, a multi-part investigation that travels deep beneath the Earth's surface to see what's down there.

"We are doing state-of-the-art work here," a Nevada Test Site worker told us. "This is as state-of-the-art as it gets. These are tools we brought in from the labs and adapted them to the underground environment.

Tunnels that run for miles, some with their own rail systems. Bases that stretch out in many directions. Secret technology that can only be tested far under the Earth's surface.

The following is from the Army's own public literature in 2020. Of course, this is written from the point of view that tunnels and tunnel-building robots are a new thing but it is simply the military's approach to let the public know many years later, what they have known, built, or innovated, decades earlier.

This is similar to their approach on the UFO/UAP phenomenon; the military has known of UAPs for many years but they are just now allowing a few videos taken by their fighter jet pilots to be known by the public and endorsed by them (the military). The military seems to be exclaiming, "Wow, this is new to us," but in truth, it is not new to them.

From an article by the US ARMY, JULY 2020:

The U.S. Army Combat Capabilities Development Command's Army Research Laboratory released a software suite that simulates the dangerous and unpredictable conditions of an underground tunnel network. Researchers interested in developing robots for subterranean environments can now use this software suite to virtually test new capabilities and techniques Autonomous robots have made steady progress in various environments above ground; however, scientists and engineers have yet to fully overcome the unique challenges found in underground locations, such as human-made tunnel systems and natural cave networks.

Army researchers believe that their software suite can facilitate the development of robots that can exploit underground environments and solve problems below the Earth's surface. "Subterranean robots could one day be useful for mining disaster recovery, in future events like the Chilean mine collapse in 2010 as well as coal mining disasters we've had in the United States in the past," said Dr. John Rogers, an Army research scientist within the laboratory's Intelligence for Robotics branch. "In addition to disaster relief, this is a very Army-relevant problem. For any sort of tunnel operation, you might want to send robots into an unknown subterranean structure to gather information before you send Soldiers in."

The software suite contains a dataset that simulates the subterranean environment of a Pittsburgh research mine, Army researchers said. Referred to as the SubT-Tunnel dataset, its simulation replicates the objective of the 2019 DARPA Subterranean Challenge Tunnel Circuit.

The dataset virtually positions an autonomous robot system at the entrance of an underground maze and determines how well it can obtain the location of five different types of items placed throughout the underground system. With the SubT-Tunnel dataset, Rogers and his colleagues want to see the various solutions that people come up with for a problem known as simultaneous localization and mapping, or SLAM, in a subterranean environment.

"Localization means keeping track of where you are in the known world, and mapping is the process of building a map of somewhere when you know where you are," Rogers said. "SLAM is a classical problem in robotics where you can do one or the other quite easily but doing both simultaneously is very difficult."

According to Rogers, commercial approaches often rely on GPS to address the SLAM problem, but robots can't receive satellite signals underground. As a result, the Army has a vested interest in how other teams choose to overcome this obstacle in addition to a few other considerations. “Typically, robot mapping technology is judged in terms of relative accuracy, where the location of the target is dependent on context clues like the location of surrounding objects,” Rogers said. “[But we] wanted to emphasize this notion of absolute accuracy, so we can have one global frame of reference that we can use to pinpoint targets on an x-y-z coordinate.” The decision to prioritize absolute accuracy over relative accuracy stems from the fact that many external interactions with underground tunnels, such as drilling from above to ventilate or provide emergency supplies to survivors during an accident, require accurate absolute estimates of the survivors’ locations, the experts said.

Users can implement their approach to the SLAM problem in the SubT-Tunnel dataset and gauge how well it locates and maps the robot as it travels through the underground maze through a points-based system. The simulation scores the performance of the robot and its SLAM approach based on how many items the robot finds and pinpoints on a map. At the same time, the SubT-Tunnel dataset also keeps track of other parameters of interest, such as how close the robot managed to get to each of the artifacts in finer grain detail.

“The software suite contains instructions on how to load your SLAM system into the dataset,” Rogers said. “There’s also a program running on the side that determines how well that SLAM technique tracks the location of the robot. Whenever the robot sees something, the user knows exactly how accurate their SLAM was at that moment in time.” Army researchers created the SubT-Tunnel dataset to accommodate a wide variety of SLAM approaches.

The dataset consists of laser-scan data taken from a robot’s point of view as it was driven through the underground maze. In addition to LiDAR data, their robot also collected metrics such as camera feed, inertial measurement units and wheel odometry. Once they built the SubT-Tunnel dataset, Rogers and his colleagues used it to test several approaches, including Google’s Cartographer and even the laboratory’s original OmniMapper software program.

“We wanted to have a diversity of different types of data so that other approaches can be evaluated and not just ones that were the most similar to the way we do SLAM," Rogers said. "With the SubT-Tunnel dataset, anyone can plug in their own implementation of SLAM and then be able to evaluate how well they would have been able to score on the Subterranean Challenge."

From MILITARY.COM, JUNE 2018

U.S. Army leaders say the next war will be fought in mega-cities, but the service has embarked on an ambitious effort to prepare most of its combat brigades to fight, not inside, but beneath them. Late last year, the Army launched an accelerated effort that funnels some $572 million into training and equipping 26 of its 31 active combat brigades to fight in large-scale subterranean facilities that exist beneath dense urban areas around the world.

For this new type of warfare, infantry units will need to know how to effectively navigate, communicate, breach heavy obstacles and attack enemy forces in underground mazes ranging from confined corridors to tunnels as wide as residential streets. Soldiers will need new equipment and training to operate in conditions such as complete darkness, bad air and lack of cover from enemy fire in areas that challenge standard Army communications equipment...

…To prepare combat units, the Army has activated mobile teams to train the leadership of 26 brigade combat teams on how prepare units for underground warfare and plan and execute large-scale combat operations in the subterranean environment…

…"Everything that you can do above ground, you can do below ground; there are just tactics and techniques that are particular," the source said, adding that tactics used in a subterranean space are much like those used in clearing buildings.

…Training is only part of the subterranean operations effort. A good portion of the $22 million going to each BCT will be needed buy special equipment so combat units can operate safety

…Underground tunnels and facilities are often lighted, but when the lights go out, soldiers will be in total darkness. The Army announced in February that it has money in its fiscal 2019 budget to buy dual-tubed, binocular-style night vision goggles to give soldiers greater depth perception than offered by the current single-tubed Enhanced Night Vision Goggles and AN/PVS 14s.

Units will also need special, hand-carried ballistic shields, at least two per squad, since tunnels provide little to no cover from enemy fire. Weapon suppressors are useful to cut down on noise that's significantly amplified in confined spaces, the manual states. Some of the heavy equipment such as torches and large power saws needed for breaching are available in brigade engineer units…

This information also mentions that since communication is blocked naturally underground, they have developed walkie-talkies which feed off energy from each other, so that when one solider sends a message to the surface, his or her comrades' walkie-talkies boost and magnify the transmission, so the signal becomes exponentially stronger so it can reach the surface.

We have to wonder if they think there will be fighting in the U.S. tunnel system or are they talking about our Army fighting in foreign tunnel systems.

UNEXPLIAMED BOOMS AND HEARTBEATS:

Now I must ask, can all those mysterious hums and unexplained booms across the U.S., possibly by the government perfecting their coast to coast, north, south, east west, tunnel system as they set up even more extensive underground facilities?

I have a contact in Minnesota who tells me about the "heartbeat" he hears in the middle of the night on some nights. It happens in every season, including the Minnesota winter. It does not "beat" every night. It is definitely outside, it is not a hearing defect nor does he hear his own heart (a phenomenon which can happen). He feels it is centered to the northeast.

My contact says it sounds like the deep bass setting on a car's music system or an idling locomotive or semi-truck's engine. I am reminded of the mind control frequency which Montauk used, which sounded like a "semi-truck engine on idle."

We are all aware of other strange booms, whistles, screeches, and hums which we have heard, or a friend has heard. Perhaps there is another equally worrisome explanation, but it could be underground military operations which are updating, perfecting, or enlarging the military tunnel system.

Here are depositions from two people who know of this military tunnel kingdom. I call them “depositions” because I asked them to swear that what they told me is true. I am impressed with the characters of these two people, and I know one of them well.

From Steve, interviewed January 25, 2021:

“I lived and worked in the tunnels for ten months. During that time I was on the surface (normal world) only once. I had a medical emergency which needed a specialist and “the tunnels” didn’t have the right kind of specialist in their medical centers.

Yes, plural “centers,” because the tunnels encompass the entire width and breadth of the country, also extending somewhat into Mexico and Canada. I say ‘somewhat’ because i really don’t know how far in Mexico and Canada they go.

So, there are “towns” all along the way where we congregate to eat, sleep, and have a bit of human interaction. Supplies are there but between centers, it is like the vacant road between Yuma and Winslow.

“There are larger centers and small ones. The entire thing is well-lighted, and I was told there was consideration given to the healthiest kind of lighting since personnel would not be in the normal world for months. The normal world has the sun, for one thing. And yes, it took a while for my eyes to get used to the sun when I left.

“Most soldiers working down there use military vehicles. There is a mag-lev (magnetic levitation) train separate but adjacent to the vehicle “road.” I was never important enough to get to ride on the mag-lev. Most vehicles are electric because despite ventilation, the air gets polluted enough without gasoline emissions in it. There are sensors for “bad air” all over the place.”

“I want to explain it is not a narrow tunnel with room for just a highway. The tunnels narrow and then widen again, but there are large, wide areas in some places. It always reminded me of the shopping mall I went to in my younger days. It is a military civilization down there.

“To make it more complex, there are various levels, each has its functioning ‘civilization.’ It becomes like 3-dimensional chess sometimes. In general, the military tunnels are at least six stories underground, some go deeper.

“I do not feel comfortable discussing my actual assignments in the tunnels. I am ok with having told you in a general way, what this huge, it seems endless, tunnel system is like. There are “backwater” areas which are not as well-lightened or as mall-like, so just like the surface, there is diversity in what it is like down there.

“In answer to your question on Dulce Base, I was assigned once to drive supplies there. I rolled into their supply depot which was at the seven story level. I was instructed to leave my vehicle there and hop a ride back the other way, with a guy who was headed ‘outward.’ I did not see any ETs unloading stuff in the loading dock. That’s all I can say, and I did not know what exactly was in the cargo I brought in.”

It seems that Steve saw the military tunnel system as it is today. He confirmed it has been enlarged and upgraded for years and so when Montauk and Dulce “connected” in 1981, it was somewhat less grand.

From Brian, interviewed at Christmastime, 2019:

“Martin, as you know, I am an astronomer. I teach at a college near Albuquerque, New Mexico. I was hiking in northern New Mexico with my son last November. We were in a very wild area, no one around.

“Suddenly we heard what I thought at first was thunder. Then I realized, the earth was trembling under our feet. I assumed it was an earthquake then, but I didn’t know quakes made a rumbling noise in quite this way. It was like a locomotive was bearing down on us, but no locomotive was there. There were no train tracks around. The vibrating rumble lasted maybe 3 minutes.

“We ate the lunch we had packed and began walking back to my truck. I had parked it at a roadside store, I had paid the woman $20.00 for the parking space at the side of her store, just to be friendly. I had parked there before, there is a lovely hiking trail there.

She came out of the store to say good-bye and I told her about the big rumble and that we saw nothing to make such a thunderous noise. No, not exactly a noise, it was a thunderous vibration, if that makes sense."

"Anyway, she smiled and said bluntly, 'That's the bullet-train.'

"I said, 'What bullet-train?' and she said, 'The one under the earth.'

"She explained that there are tunnels under this area which lead to Dulce, an underground, top-secret base. 'They have a bullet-train. We don't get to ride it and we don't get to see it or know about it!' she laughed.

"I asked her if the train runs on schedule, that I'd like to experience it again - all that thunderous vibration. She answered, "No, does not run on a schedule. It can go by under there frequently or it cannot go by, for weeks, but of course I don't sit on that spot and wait. Several of us who know about it, have put our info together and realized it probably does not roll steadily on a schedule."

"She also told us that UFOs are common in this area and that Dulce "houses ETs." My ten year old son became frightened, but then he wanted to see the UFOs and maybe the ETs too. I felt the same way, or rather, both ways. She waved good-bye as I drove away. I was curious afterward and researched the fact there were no earthquakes in the vicinity that day.

PEOPLE JUST DO NOT REALIZE!

Most people do not realize that there is a cavern system stretching throughout the North American continent, extending in every direction. No doubt these caverns were helpful to those in the military who created the artificial tunnel system which is also extensive.

Are the caverns entirely natural or did an alien race create many of them, or at least some of them? Caverns are a natural feature of Earth but the cavern system is so "complete."

Erich A. Aggen, Jr., in his article 'TOP SECRET: ALIEN UFO BASES' (SEARCH Magazine, Summer 1991 issue), presents the following revelations concerning the UFO-Subterranean connection:

“...A great deal of UFO research has also led to the conclusion that various...species of aliens have set up secret underground bases in the United States and other countries. It is logical to assume that such bases have also been established elsewhere in the solar system.

“If such bases exist, where would we find them on Earth? Existing information allows us to make a few educated guesses.

“The dark, cavernous world beneath our feet is the source of many baffling mysteries. Clandestine UFO bases may be hidden deep within the earth in natural and/or artificial caverns. As a former member of the National Speleological Society (NSS), I am well aware of the vast extent of cave systems within the United States.

“In my own native state of Missouri, for example, there are over 2,500 known caves and dozens of new ones being discovered every year. Many of these caves are intricately linked together by numerous passageways and interconnecting chambers.

“One particular species of blind white (albino) cave fish, the typhlichthys, has been found in many widely separated cave systems over several states. It has been found in caves that make a great arc through Kentucky, Indiana, Illinois and UNDER the Mississippi River extending into Missouri, Arkansas, and Oklahoma! A vast section of the United States must lie above one immense cavern system!

“Many caves possess rooms hundreds of feet in length, width, and height. In most cases, these huge natural caverns can only be reached and explored with the utmost skill and perseverance. There are only a few thousand NSS members in the United States and only a few hundred of this number are active spelunkers. With so few spelunkers spread over such a large area, only a very small fraction of the tens of thousands of known caves in this country have been carefully mapped and explored. Thousands of other caves remain undiscovered and unexplored.

“Extensive evidence indicates that caves in the United States may be connected with caves in other parts of the world. In Mexico, the cave known as ‘Sotano de las Golondrinas’, (or) basement of the swallows, in the Municipio de Aquismo, S.L.P., reaches a depth of 1100 feet (334 meters).

“The cave is actually a giant ‘sinkhole’ or ‘hole’ in the ground with a nearly circular opening at the top, hundreds of feet in diameter. It is impossible to climb down the sides of Golondrinas because the walls of the opening are too smooth and “belled-out”.

“To reach the bottom of the cave, a special rope over 1100 feet long must be secured at the top of the opening and dropped into the sinkhole. Explorers must then descend into the yawning hole one at a time using special cave repelling gear and climbing techniques.

“At the bottom of Sotano de las Golondrinas are numerous ‘leads’ or openings to a multiplicity of different crevices, passages, crawlways, and rooms which have never been mapped or investigated.

“The entrance to Golondrinas is located in one of the most primitive and uncivilized areas of Mexico and local inhabitants are afraid to approach the cave because they believe it is full of ‘evil spirits’ which lure people to their deaths. They tell stories of people mysteriously disappearing never to be heard from again while passing near the cave entrance.

“These stories may be based more on fact than fiction; they are similar in some respects to UFO abduction reports. Because of its huge size, remote location, and unique geological structure, Golondrinas would be an ideal UFO base. Naturally camouflaged caves in other parts of the world may serve as excellent natural bases, way stations, and ‘depots’ for UFOs.

“An underground nuclear test called the ‘Schooner Experiment’ conducted in December 1968, substantiates the theory that caves in North and South America are intimately linked. In this test, a 35-kiloton nuclear bomb was exploded under the desert of Nevada.

“Five days after the test, the radiation level rose from 10 to 20 times in Canada, 1000 miles away from the Nevada test site! The only way the radioactive dust could have traveled that far is through an interconnected system of caves extending all the way from Nevada to Canada!”

It is a fascinating theory that the aliens who work at Dulce and probably live there as well, might also have secret installations, for instance, on Jupiter's Galilean moon of Europa or Saturn's ocean-world moon of Enceladus. If these aliens burrow (perhaps with highly technical equipment), under the planet upon which they stand, so easily and extensively, then Dulce Base on Earth might not be their only place of Solar System domicile.

CHAPTER FIVE:
DULCE ORIGINS

Dulce, New Mexico has fewer than 3,000 residents but into this small town, uncounted UFO researchers and theorists have arrived, because it is believed that a top secret, black ops military installation lies under the town and the Archuleta Mesa. Dulce Base is located fairly near the New Mexico-Colorado border.

The base is at least seven stories underground and is called simply, “Dulce Base.” It is not operated by the Air Force, Army, Navy, or Marines. It seems to exist on its own but it is the Department of Energy, which also controls nuclear power and bombs, which officially runs it.

Dulce is home to the headquarters of the Jicarilla Apache Reservation. It has been said that tales of Dulce are perpetuated by local people to bring in tourist dollars, and good for them if this is true! They are sitting on top of what could be extremely dangerous research and nuclear testing was done underground in that area in the past. For all anyone knows, efforts to harness anti-matter or create wormholes, for instance, could be part of the research now.

“The whole town of Dulce, whoever you want to talk to, they’ll tell you what they’ve seen,” says Geraldine Julian, who has seen UFOs in the vicinity since the 1960s. “It’s not just a fairy tale. All the things are true, and I believe every last one of them, too, because I’ve seen it myself.”

Later on, I will share a deposition from a woman we call “Maria,” who is an Army public relations specialist who worked in Dulce Base and got down into its lower levels.

What are the Indigenous legends which form the origins of Dulce and was this the reason the government chose that location 2 miles underground, as it developed Montauk’s evil western twin?

APACHE, NAVAJO AND AZTEC LEGENDS

The Jicarilla Apache tell of tall, fair-haired beings who appeared from the sky and were known to the Apache Nation, those who are their ancestors. They also tell of contact with ‘Little People’ who formed a tribe, much as the Apache ancestors did.

The tall beings and the Little People both, legend says, came from the sky in vehicles which flew through Earth skies but could go into the stars. Indigenous stories tell of various tribes of beings, some of whom were native to the underground, while others were native to the sky and the stars. Then there are also surface tribes, like humans.

Interestingly, “Maria,” who worked in the Dulce complex and attests to the fact that she saw extraterrestrials and/or ultra-terrestrial aliens also working in Dulce, numerous times over the course of almost two years. I spent several years convincing Maria to talk with me about her days down in Dulce and I can vouch for her sincerity. Maria swears to the fact that she saw four different types of aliens; two of them were tall, very blonde human-like beings, while another kind of alien were “little people.”

Might these same races now working in Dulce, have been the contacts for the ancestors of the Jicarilla Apache nation? “Tall blondes” and “little people,” these sound much the same! We will have Maria’s account in a moment.

Navajo legends state that the Navajo once lived below the surface, as did the Coyoteros and the fair-haired people. These three different groups all lived in peace for a time below the mountain near Silverton, Colorado. After coming to the surface, the Navajo settled in the canyons near Navajo Dam, between Aztec and Dulce, New Mexico. The Southwest and New Mexico in particular, are home to not only one of America’s indigenous people, but to several diverse Nations of them.

Montezuma, the Aztec leader, was born near Taos, New Mexico, and was said to be schooled by those aliens who lived in caverns within Pueblo Peak. This mountain also has many UFO reports in the modern day, and Blue Lake in that area, is said to have USOs (underwater submerged objects), coming and going from its waters.

The Aztec Nation of Mexico also lived in what is now New Mexico and believed that the Sun God requires he (or it) be given blood; so, they offered human sacrifices. It is believed they killed over 10,000 people each year. Near Taos is a cave above the Lucero River, not far from Frijoles Canyon, and many human sacrifices were performed there. Like the modern researchers employed by Montauk and Dulce, hallucinogenic drugs were often used. The Aztec shaman used natural drugs, however, like hallucinogenic peyote and ayahuasca. These were given to the victim but the shaman took a different mixture of drugs, according to Aztec tradition.

BACK TO THE MODERN DAY:

Dulce Base became known to the public in the 1970s. There were a number of animal mutilations in the vicinity, often executed in very strange ways. Lasers must have been used, the genitals of the animals were surgically removed, and other seemingly nonsensical mutilation occurred without the perpetrators taking the meat of the animal. Did this have something to do with the animals' DNA? New Mexico State Trooper Gabriel Valdez investigated and later wrote a book which helped others know about Dulce.

On top of this, strange craft were reported in the skies, and Valdez found gas masks near the dead animals which possibly indicated government involvement. "Aliens and the government, working together" emerged as a probable theory.

Then came Phil Schneider, an alleged government engineer, who said he built the Dulce Installation along with other engineers and workers in 1979. He claimed it was indeed an alien base. He and others encountered aliens during the construction. There were skeptics who said he never worked as an engineer on the Dulce project.

Schneider seemed to spin additional tales; I have always thought his original account is true but that possibly he made up additional information to continue getting attention. This is a "sad but true" syndrome for many UFO experiencers. But I could be wrong about Phil, maybe what he said is all true.

Phil claimed military service members engaged in a gun battle with the aliens for "ownership" of Dulce but later a peace deal with arranged, for instance. Well, the evidence now indicates there is an agreement for humans and aliens to both work at Dulce.

EARLY RUMORS ABOUT DULCE:

Reportedly, in several of the cattle mutilations, cows had fetuses within them which were genetically manipulated, looking as if some geneticist had created a half-cow/half-horse, or half dog/half monkey. In the latter case, the cow would be used as an incubator only. The indication of animal abuse is apparent.

“The evidence of tampering was left there — you know, animal predators don’t leave gas masks, glow sticks, radar chaff,” Officer Valdez said. “They don’t leave that stuff.”

To top it off, there were many UFO sightings and encounters happening in the area, so that New Mexican/Colorado border had become a hotbed for both kinds of reports by the early 1980s.

Incidentally, it was 1981 when Montauk back on the east coast, went entirely underground and was apparently linked to Dulce by mag-lev bullet train and tunnel system.

BENNEWITZ, SCHNEIDER AND LEAR:

In 1979, Paul Bennewitz, a physicist and Albuquerque businessman, entered the scene regarding Dulce. He believed he had intercepted electronic signals from deep below the surface on the Archuleta Mesa, upon which the town of Dulce stood. He explained these signals were directed at something in space, above. In 1982, Bennewitz first wrote that the Dulce Base existed. Then in 1988, he detailed how to infiltrate the facility, which was not a wise thing to do. It was called “Project Beta.”

Phil Schneider made many speeches and presentations. He tended to legitimize in the public mind, not only his own claims but those of Paul Bennewitz and John Lear as well. Schneider claimed to be an explosives expert and former government employee. In 1995, his most famous claim was that when the government encountered aliens in the tunnels and caverns around Dulce, there was a short-lived war between the aliens and the government. Phil Schneider claimed to have been in the fight against the aliens and to have lost several fingers.

There was confusion, however, as to whether Dulce was deliberately built or if it began when ancient caverns were exposed or blown up during an underground nuclear test in 1967 in the New Mexican desert. A third argument said the government was merely attempting to find and harness subterranean gas reservoirs and encountered the cave-dwelling aliens at that time.

The origin accounts vary as to whether the aliens were simply traumatized when their native caverns were blown up, or if the aliens were malicious invaders who wanted a base in New Mexico. Schneider had said 60 government soldiers were killed in the mini-war. This was never proven true. Phil Schneider died by suicide in 1996 after many speaking engagements around the country with his claims about Dulce base.

In 1990, John Lear claimed to have a number of independent confirmations that the Dulce underground base is real. He said it stretches seven stories underground. Lear was the son of the Learjet inventor and a pilot himself. He claimed to know about and describe the different alien species who are on and above Earth, and he claimed he knew which ones are at Dulce.

Like the UFO field itself, it is difficult to know what is the truth regarding individuals like Schneider, Lear, and Paul Bennewitz who was confined to mental hospitals several times. Was he a victim of an effort to shut him up, or was he paranoid and delusional?

Bennewitz detailed his claims to the Aerial Phenomena Research Organization but they regarded him as paranoid and/or lying. William Moore, a ufologist himself, said he tried to push Bennewitz into a mental breakdown by feeding him false information about aliens. Why did Moore do this?

Former special agent for the U.S. Air Force Office of Special Investigations Richard Doty said it was his job to feed false information to UFO researchers. Why?

It seems none of this was Bennewitz' fault but rather, reflects poorly on those who deliberately tried to delude him. Did they do this so cruelly on purpose because there was truth in what he claimed?

Possibly he had legitimate experiences regarding the Dulce underground installation, but then felt the need to add to his accounts, perhaps for attention and money. We really cannot be sure but certainly Paul Bennewitz, like Phil Schneider, are a part of the Dulce epic. Bennewitz died on June 23, 2003.

And so, the completed Dulce Base: It is disclosed by various informants and whistle-blowers that each floor is said to be designated for specific research, from Montauk's pioneering mind-control on human beings to genetic experiments resulting in alien-human hybrids. Some diagrams even claim that Grey and Reptilian aliens have their own housing, while ex-employees tell us the sixth floor is the most terrifying of all. There is testimony that one can hear screams and pleadings for help in the bowels of Dulce. The "black budget" allotted to the U.S. military, pays for the clandestine research at these such installations.

CHAPTER SIX:
DULCE REALITIES

I have devoted much of my time in retirement, and too much time before my retirement, gathering promising leads on former workers within the huge Dulce complex who might be willing to share their experiences there. Needless to say, there are few willing to talk, they are frightened of reprisal.

However, there are hundreds – probably thousands – of ex-Dulce workers, some of whom had access or occasionally had reason, to go to the lower levels. Nearly all of them, I am sure, would like very much to share what they witnessed but, very few have the courage to do so.

I persevered and was fortunate to find several of them who felt secure enough to speak on my cassette tape recorder. I always go through the formality of telling them that it is a deposition and they must swear to tell the truth to me, to the readers, the people of this country and the world, who will read their words.

It is up to these brave souls to tell you about “Dulce Realities” and I will add what I can. In 1999, B. Branton wrote The Dulce Wars: Underground Alien Bases and the Battle for Planet Earth.

In the Introduction, he wrote:

“From that point on, it was as if some ancient seal had been broken, as if an ancient cloud of darkness had begun imploding in upon itself, broken apart by the piercing light of human perception and the relentless probing’s and scrutiny of brave and daring souls.”

“Sensing that something very wrong and unnatural was going on here, something ancient and evil, some of these brave souls — who by choice or chance found themselves battling-it-out on the front lines against ancient forces that were determined to keep themselves from being exposed — continued to wage their all-too-often personal battles against the enigma... some of these inevitably losing their minds if not their very lives in the process.”

A practical bit of info from Branton is that “… most signs on doors and hallways are in the alien symbol language and a universal symbol system understood by humans and aliens.”

Let's begin this implosion an ancient cloud of darkness with the sworn narrative of a brave woman we will call "Maria." I interviewed her on September 12, 2016, for this first session. We sat together again a month later and in that session, she disclosed what she knows, what she saw, in terms of what experiments and research was (and is), going on inside Dulce. We offer that second session at the close of this chapter.

I transcribed Maria's words and inserted paragraphing just for clarity. I changed no words.

Maria: I was an Army public relations and communications specialist. I hoped to have a communications career in which I would help present the Army and therefore all the U.S. armed forces, in a positive light. I looked forward to making it known that we have many brave military heroes. The campaigns and wars they participated in, were not always popular but I felt strongly that these heroes had kept America safe. They needed better PR! And so I followed that path.

I didn't believe any so-called conspiracy theories or so-called urban legends like Dulce. I had heard about it but I laughed at the guy who told me and said it was ridiculous.

So, when I was asked if I would want to be assigned to Dulce Base in a Communications/PR capacity, I said "Yes!" with no hesitation. I was to be head of the department, my first run at being the head of anything.

The position itself was a bit of a joke, come to find out. I ended up with no work to do many days but then I would be asked to fill in elsewhere, on the first or second level. Frankly, I felt they were being sexist, I was doing secretarial and "Girl Friday" stuff half the time. There were a few times they needed a positive spin on some goof-up or something, mostly for local media so then I could do what I had trained for, and wanted to do.

I asked myself, why did they even want a PR office in Dulce? Even if terrible stuff didn't go on there, it is top secret designation so what PR were they thinking of? It was my guess that they had plenty of money to spend and just in case they needed a PR person, like if something big blew up, they would have one (me), ready to go.

So, for about the first year, that's how it went. I was usually a bit more than a messenger but less than the boss of any real department. And let's face it, sometimes I was just a messenger from level to level. But that place is so damn huge that yes, I would go from, Level 2 to Level 3, but the section of Level 3 which I needed to get to, might be way across the mesa (that's "the mesa" if you were on the surface), it took time, it was good exercise, and I acquired knowledge so I didn't get lost as time went on. I sure did get lost at first, it is a labyrinth!

So as time went on, I sometimes got on one of the elevators and went down to ask the 2nd or 3rd level offices if they needed me for anything, and the whole thing got more relaxed as far as my security clearance was concerned. I was not cleared for any level below Level 3 but soon enough, I had been there longer than some of the security people so they assumed I was cleared.

I know there are accounts from earlier days at Dulce which say that security would shoot anyone without clearance who was in a forbidden place. I'm sure that was true but I worked there just recently and things were more relaxed than that. I am a nice-looking woman, I get along easily with people, and I had top security clearance, was head of Public Relations, so I got by with mostly male, often bored, security people. That's not pretty but it is true. And you know, there are many levels of "top security clearance," my level was not high enough for the lower levels of Dulce.

Incidentally, security people in that place would be there for months, even years, but then be GONE one day and never be there again, never heard from again. In several instances, I quietly tried to find their reassignment, maybe to another area of Dulce, but in each case, they were just GONE.

In my first year there, I had heard and seen a few things which made me scratch my head, like "What the hell?" But for some reason, I didn't take it real seriously and I did not feel real worried that I would be threatening my safety, if I just looked around, so to speak. There were little things I'd come across which upset and puzzled me.

There are speedy elevators between Levels 1, 2, and 3, but you have to get off the elevator at Level 3 and go to another elevator in the labyrinth of Level 3, to get down to Level 4 through 7. Maybe it goes farther down into the underground but my knowledge of it goes to Level 7. I only heard rumors of “deeper.”

I became the messenger who would hand-carry, as was supposed to be done, items like computer tablets with work on them, gadgets, sometimes just written notes, and a few strange looking gizmos, to one of the scientists or engineers on Levels 4, 5, or 6. There were other messengers, it depends what shift, but maybe only three or four of us who were trusted to hand-carry stuff to a particular researcher. Dulce did not allow emails or texts to go between researchers.

I never tried to read what I was carrying or figure out how it worked if it was a gadget. There were cameras everywhere, I probably would not understand the physics anyway, and I was too big a chicken-shit.

And so, I went down to the 4^{th}, 5^{th} or 6^{th} level a total of about thirty times over almost a year. I did not get to Level 7. This is all difficult for me to relate out loud to anyone but I trust you and I feel I must let the people of the U.S. know this somehow because I am about to leave the U.S.

Out of those thirty times, I saw aliens, extraterrestrials, ultra-terrestrials, whatever the proper term is, each time!

There might be one or two, but many times I saw as many as 12 working on a project together. Human researchers were around too but not always.

Was I shocked the first time I saw an alien?

Hell, yes, I went home that evening and got drunk!

But, at the moment I encountered him, or her, or it, in the corridor, I managed to just keep walking at a military clip. The first alien I saw was Reptilian.

My curiosity overcame my fear but maybe that was a bad thing.

Often, I actually handed what I was supposed to deliver, to an alien. As I have said, there was more than one kind. It was almost always taken from my hand and they turned abruptly away from me on purpose, apparently. We never exchanged, “Thanks,” or “Have a good day.”

They walked or ambulated in the open, two kinds of them did not exactly walk as we do. Sometimes I lost count of how many were moving around down in those levels, but there were many. Usually a group of them would be the same kind of alien and I’ll describe the kinds I saw in a second.

I did see mixed groups of them, sometimes there would be “talking,” that is, incomprehensible out-loud communicating, often in “chirps,” but others times, they were all silent, yet seemed engaged with each other. I concluded they were using telepathy or they were linked together through tech implants.

I kept all these specifics in my head because I knew it was important. I was seeing something which (whom) was not supposed to exist on this Earth in this way at a U.S. base, and I took careful mental notes, my heart pounding as I tried to look casual and busy.

I hate to say it, but I saw no female aliens except, I think but am not sure, one dwarf-like female. There were several human female researchers, but they sure weren’t friendly. Or maybe the female aliens were dressed same as the males and since I didn’t want to stare, I never realized.

As time went on, I was getting more than a bit afraid. I was beginning to realize that Dulce, in all its evil strangeness, was not an urban myth at all. But my curiosity was going full blast too.

Yes, I had heard many more rumors by that time within the upper levels of Dulce, so perhaps that also prepared me. As I said, the aliens were not all the same species. In my time at Dulce, I saw five distinct species or whatever you would call them, maybe “tribes?” Races? Contingents?

I want to stress that these five tribes of aliens were “running the joint!” They were not just wandering around. Each group, including the human researchers, seemed to have a nearly equal number involved in Dulce projects, as if that had been agreed-to. But, it seemed to me there were less humans there than any other group.

#1 Alien Contingent are dwarf-like humanoids. If I saw them in a crowd at a distance, I would think they were “little people” and thus human. But, their eyes and the shape of their heads, is not like little human people. Their heads are huge, especially their skulls, whereas their faces are small and pinched in comparison.

Their skin was the color of a manilla envelope, it didn’t look healthy or transparent like our skin actually is, I got no hint of blood coursing beneath their skin but maybe it was. They did seem “natural” to me, probably not created in the lab as droids or semi-aware helping-mechanisms.

They wore, jumpsuits, one-piece. Some jumpsuits were blue, some yellow-tan, some black and a few were green. I do remember, once I noticed a dwarf-like ET in a bright red jump-suit. He was the only one in a bright red jumpsuit, almost like he was being rewarded or punished. Was he high up or low down (which?), but that was just my silly guessing game.

#2 Alien Contingent are aliens who looked human from a distance but were not human up close. They were not super-tall, around 6 feet tall. In this group I saw a total of two who were dark-brown in skin color but most were olive-skinned with their hair being lighter than their skin. They looked like a bunch of California surfing guys who got radiated or something. They were oddly attractive, actually good looking, but just not quite a good old human.

Their eyes were not human, their eyes seemed to be wild, electric colors, not just blue eyes but electric blue eyes, which seemed to have their switch thrown to “on.” I didn’t want to stare but am sure I saw “electric” yellow, orange, blue, and green, eyed individuals. They were perhaps the friendliest, which is how I got a look at their eyes. Incidentally, I have read Travis Walton’s book and I think these may be his “golden humans.”

#3 Alien Contingent are very much like the “Tall White” or “Nordic” descriptions of aliens. When going into specific sections or offices, I saw them have to duck to fit through the door. Some of these aliens must be eight feet tall at least. Main entrances were high enough, but there are lower clearances here and there.

I never saw one who didn't move like he had arthritis but strangely, when they were walking in the corridor to get to somewhere else, they seemed to glide like they had a moving walkway under their long skirts. Yes, they wore robes or kilts but long kilts. If any of them were female in a skirt, well, I just didn't get a female vibe from any of them.

I got the impression they were supervisors or at least thought themselves very important. They seemed downright hostile to me, disdainful and certainly not friendly.

#4 Alien Contingent stood out as the most alien-looking. They have mottled skin, it looked like thick skin, and definitely reminded me of reptiles. They have several colors in their skin, the colors varied from dark green to shades of tan, brown and grey. I saw one of them with a streak of bright blue in his face, it was in his actual skin or hide, I have no idea if he was a genetic oddity or a royal prince or none of the above.

The Reptilians wore what I think was their military unform. They looked very muscular and strong and were as tall as most humans, no taller. They were actually less-hostile than the very tall Nordics. Twice, I swear, one of them grinned at me as he accepted an electronic tablet I was delivering. His toothy grin actually scared the crap out of me, that tribe has sharp large teeth! Plus, I could feel sexual energy in his grin, he seemed lecherous and predatory.

Five Alien Contingent are The Greys. I had almost no interaction with them, I was given something to deliver to them, maybe a total of three times. When I first saw one of them, I was more frightened than I was of any of the other tribes, including the Reptilians.

The Greys vary more in height, some are maybe 3 feet tall, others are almost 6 feet tall. I don't know if those are two separate tribes but they seemed to work together. It sounds terrible but the tall ones seemed to boss around the little ones.

All types of Greys were not only thin, they were, in my opinion, just plain missing huge body parts, like organs. They were just too thin to fit them in, it seemed. They had a grey covering, not jumpsuits, don't know what to call it other than a covering.

It is difficult for me to see them as natural, flesh and blood, beings. Maybe they are, I have even heard that they are like we humans will be in the far future. But I have also heard they are mechanisms or something less than a full form of life.

The Greys seemed contained in their own reality, somehow. I never saw them stop for a moment whatever they were intently working on. But I have to admit, I usually did not want to step into an office or a research area where they were.

I would hand off what I was carrying to them, in the hallway if I could. One of them would be standing in the doorway with spooky fingers out-stretched, to receive what I was carrying. I say "spooky" because they have 3 very long, extremely thin, wispy fingers, and no thumb.

I admit that I did step into offices or research areas in which the other contingents were working, sometimes there were several different tribes represented in experiments and other times, there was just one tribe doing something, with sometimes a human researcher in there too. I got glimpses of victims of these experiments. I would like to take a break before I get into that.

I wish we who try or tried to work at Dulce, would have been given a few basic facts, like where are these various alien races, from, what planet, what dimension, and just some general facts, but of course, this never happens.

Martin's note: "Maria" had to leave our conversation before she began talking about the experiments, other terrible events going on, and how it happened that she was let-go from Dulce, then harassed. She feared for her life and went through an emotional hell. She could share this hell with no one. She always kept her family and friends welfares in mind.

However, we got back together five days later. I had to convince her to have the second meeting with me, she was getting ready to leave the country the next day. I cannot say more.

Let’s quote B. Branton, in his book “The Dulce Wars,” for the final word on Maria’s first report:

“Many of ‘us’ who have continued the battle have sacrificed our comfort, our social and economic welfare, and in some cases even our very lives to fight the Enigma, because we have caught a brief glimpse of the potential threat that “the enemy within” poses to the future of Liberty and to this great Independent nation of America.”

I ask myself, what are the differences between Montauk and Dulce?

They are certainly connected, by a direct tunnel link which includes a “bullet-train.” But their areas of greatest focus, vary. Montauk excels in time tripping and time travel and mind control. At least, it did in the 1980s, it is of course, difficult to know what goes on in these arenas which are far underground with entrances and exits which are underground. They only have access to the surface miles away where no one would suspect anything. I have heard that one of Montauk’s few surface-exits is in a normal-looking house. I do indeed feel that Montauk’s main divisions still delve into the two categories of “time” and “mind control.”

Dulce first and foremost, is run by aliens to a large degree, and this is because of an official policy sanctioned by our government. Granted, there were likely shoot-outs in mini-wars between our military and the aliens, and the aliens won. These were often carried out in those endless tunnels (a labyrinth, as Maria said), and both humans and aliens were killed in the conflict. All this was probably covered up in the bogus report of a prison riot “near Los Alamos” in 1980 in which “prisoners died.”

Back to what Dulce excels in, even today: Dulce is about “alien experiments” into the devil-knows-what, and genetics. The genetics are on such an extreme scale as to be called “eugenics,” harkening back to the Nazi regime and its infamous, evil Dr. Mengele.

Therefore, we will delve into both the extreme “alien presence” of Dulce, and also the frightening, forbidden genetic experiments performed there. It is difficult to double-check the truthfulness of witnesses claiming to know about what is done to people and animals in these genetic experiments. I have sifted through accounts and tried for the true ones.

I would like to share with you now, words written regarding observations at Dulce:

“There is a man let’s call Steve, known as a computer genius. He said that he had seen both grey AND reptilian life forms in various underground facilities, including Dulce. One of the underground projects was Project Startalk. The work involved lasers. The informer, a guy named Paul, said that he worked in a big underground building. Project Startalk utilized a powerful laser which strikes a mirror and is sent into space. The laser is modulated with a signal and acts as a beacon to bring in UFOs. The beacon is directed at friendly forces from other systems.”

“…He once saw a saucer land and go into an underground hanger. Inside the underground building is a huge computer complex… The computers use an alien symbolic language. Manuals indicate codes that can be entered. There is a large screen in this complex that displays various star systems and galaxies…

The technology used is so far advanced that it is beyond known engineering technology.

It is hypothesized that this interdimensional communication was subspace communication (also can becalled “hyperspace). This is only science fiction to us at this point, although human scientists are working on making it a reality. Messages “back home” (home planet) in our current laser-light modulated in third dimensional beams, would take at least four years to reach the nearest star. So the aliens must use some method we do not have yet, like “subspace,” to communicate with their planet.

Maria mentioned also that security clearance for a military member to work at either Montauk or Dulce, takes well over a year. We assume for a researcher – a physicist or engineer – to work at either location, would take even longer since they end up in the thick of the experiments, whereas military members are mostly for security or, like Maria, for public relations or even clerical work in administration offices. The phones are tapped of whoever works there, even workers' home phones.

And, as Maria told us, for some strange reason, text messages and emails between workers within Montauk and Dulce, are forbidden, thus the need to hand-carry timely messages. I guess they feel they can control those who carry the messages, easier than they can keep track of all the electronic texts and emails which researchers might be sending each other.

In The Duce Wars, B. Branton states, "If the Military-Industrial establishment or the 'corporate' government is involved with the alien interaction as it would seem to be, then the electorate government does not have entire control of the situation... those who control these corporate structures do! Or those whose motivation is to increase their wealth and power even if it means making "business deals" with malevolent alien forces. Their motivation would NOT necessarily be to govern the American citizen's nor uphold and defend the Constitution of the United States! As they say, the lust for money is the root of ALL evil. "

The budget for Dulce is gigantic. Our tax dollars go for evil.

I had been told years ago by a contact, that Dulce has a "logo" which is "dark orange with an inverted triangle and two or three dark stripes running across it."

I was completely astounded when I read the following in Timothy Green Beckley's Dulce book, "…Ann slipped it into her pocket. That night, alone at a motel in Durango, she opened the paper. There were three things on its yellow page: a sketch of an alien, an inverted triangle and the name Dulce. She stared at the mysterious drawing and tried to figure out what it all meant. The alien in the drawing had a large head, big black eyes, no nose and no hair. The triangle was shaded black. After looking at it, she flushed the paper down the toilet. That night, she had nightmares about aliens."

"The next morning, over coffee, she was looking at a map for a route back to Las Vegas when she noticed the name of a small town near the New Mexico state line called 'Dulce.' Were there aliens in Dulce? What was Tom trying to tell her? Then she remembered where she had seen the black triangle before. The symbol was on a hat on Tom's coffee table. It was burnt orange with a black inverted triangle with gold bands cutting it in three sections."

I can make only two guesses at this synchronicity:

1) My contact and "Ann," whom Beckley writes about, knew each other

OR

2) This logo, this symbol for Dulce, is absolutely accurate and the verification comes from these two independent sources.

Incidentally, I asked Maria what the symbol of Dulce is, and she did not answer the question, but she had been expressing thoughts on a different aspect of Dulce, and I don't think she intentionally ignored the question. Her mind was on what she had witnessed, and she may not have even heard my question.

Let me tell you about what I learned about a particular weapon which is used at Montauk, Dulce, and Area 51/52, which is right out of a science fiction film. The person possessing this weapon can set it to "light stun," "heavy stun," or "kill." This weapon looks like a "ray gun toy" or a flashlight. A child could hold it and turn the nobs to the various settings. The kill mode not only kills, it vaporizes, leaving no trace of the victim – just like science fiction.

The "heavy stun" mode will paralyze an individual for hours to such a degree that a doctor would certify that he or she died. When the victim does come back to life, he or she is very suggestable. It is another few hours before he returns to full consciousness. During those few hours, he can be reprogrammed, modes of thinking and behavior can be "inserted," and even extreme actions which the individual would never do himself, can be programmed in, to be carried out later.

This weapon is at Dulce, and at Montauk and Area 51/52 too, I assume. Humans and aliens carry this weapon as do researchers and security people. I have heard accounts of these individuals occasionally vaporizing one another. I do know that there is no law, no civilized rules, in these places. Oh, there are endless rules, but no integrity, no ethics. In a way, it is a jungle, survival of the fittest (or the cruelest). I have been told there is no punishment in these instances.

When Dulce was first set up, they attempted to follow any human employee who saw any kind of alien but as the years have gone by, that has been relaxed a bit, simply due to necessity. They have to keep a low profile, they cannot follow everyone, and they improved strict vetting for security clearance to work at Dulce. They really "have your number" if you are foolish enough to take a position there, even for just the upper levels, but they have relaxed the old policy of killing or reprogramming anyone who sees aliens or who goes to lower levels without really good reason, like being one of the human researchers, engineers, or techs.

I'm not saying they would not still kill, they probably would and do, but it is impossible to know. I don't think they have changed THAT much.

In "The Dulce Wars," author B. Branton asks the following question of his contact who had worked in Dulce but escaped, taking evidence of its actual deeds and projects:

"Q - Is there proof available that could confirm the allegations of the underground base, or are we just supposed to believe you?

"A - Many people have asked that one. No, I don't expect people to believe with blind faith, there is tangible proof that has been seen, felt or inspected by quite a few folks. I'm in no position to go on a lecture circuit to explain to every person on a one-to-one basis. I am trying to stay alive.

"All I can do is state again, that Dulce is a SECRET FACILITY. They work HARD to make sure nobody can find the place. If everyone could easily find it, it wouldn't be a SECRET facility. I've explained the extreme security methods they use. There is other proof available.

"There are five sets of copies in five different boxes in five different locations that hold complete proof of everything I have tried to explain. Here is a list of contents of each box:

"(A) 27 sheets of 8 x 10 photographs of Aliens, creatures, cages and vats.

(B) One silent candid video tape, begins on the computer banks, shows the vats, multi shots of Nightmare Hall, two shots of Greys, one shot of the Terminal showing sign saying ‘To Los Alamos’ and about thirty seconds of the Shuttle train arriving.

(C) 25 pages of diagrams, chemical formulas and schematics of alien equipment.

(D) A copy of the new treaty complete with signatures. (E) 2 pages of original Alien documents signed by Ronald Reagan [as governor of California], each page includes Reagan’s signature.

The ORIGINAL set mentioned above is sealed in one piece oxygen free heavy plastic box. That set includes:

(A) 27 sheets of 8 x 10 WITH original negatives

(B) The video tape, AND the original micro film, from which the video tape was copied.

(C) The 25 original pages of diagrams [with notations], formulas, alien equipment schematics plus the schematics for the Flash Gun and MY Flash Gun.

(D) The treaty with Reagan’s signature plus seven other political signatures and four Alien signatures.”

(end Branton quote)

I do not have my own proof of the above statement but it may well be accurate. I wonder where each of those five boxes are now.

Do these five alien tribes or species, actually work together as Maria reports? Or at least, she says, they do sometimes but usually work within their tribe. I have found that the 1970s and 1980s were “rough shod” and definitely science fiction come-true in a most-terrible way at the three installations.

Maria worked in Dulce in the 21st Century. Over time, we can’t say it is “political correctness” having arrived, but it is its own form of that concept. Things mostly have settled down, I am told. They had (and have) three functioning, top-secret, installations, Montauk, Dulce and Area 51/52, with all the money they can spend, there is no maniac theory they cannot quietly test and play with. Oh, there are many other “top secret” places too, but these are the “primary three.”

In a sense, it actually seems worse than the days of the “wild west” atmosphere of the 1970s and 1980s, because aliens and human researchers have settled in, they do what they want, and no one rocks the boat even if they hate each other. No one wants the “Dulce Wars” which Phil Schneider, for instance, ran into. These days are the worst because there is a “status quo.” It just continues.

Is there prejudice and conflict among the aliens species at Dulce? It is difficult to know because humans cannot understand them, remember that Maria mentioned “chirps” back and forth. Or, the aliens use telepathy which is natural to them, or they have technical (thus not-natural) implants. Either way, we can’t understand them. Plus, very few human researchers or security who are down there, will ever talk about it. They are simply scared to death.

The top-ranking human researchers also have implants which do allow mental communication direct from some (not all) of the alien tribes.

The fact that the aliens stick to their own group most of the time, shows that there probably is bias, even hatred, toward the other races of aliens. Of course, who decides who works on what project? Again, this is something we really cannot know for sure. Probably the five or more alien species who work at Dulce are getting along because they will be in trouble if they do not diligently keep working. The same holds true for the humans involved, even more so.

There are politics involved of a human nature but most especially, of an alien nature. We do not know the intricacies of their planets’ histories, or what makes them what they are. But by the nature of their work, as we have heard in both Montauk and Dulce, they seem not to be enlightened, positive aliens at all. Thus it seems likely they are full of bias against those not like them.

In The Dulce Wars, Branton writes this:

“Even within the collaboration, there is a great deal of struggle over whether the humanoid or reptiloid agendas should have the upper hand. Within the collaboration itself ‘speciesism’ [akin to racism] exists at certain levels, so in spite of the species prejudices the collaboration continues nevertheless because of a ‘marriage of convenience’.

“In other words, the Greys want to take over the planet and impose a slave society to ultimately serve their empire, but they need the Illuminati’s international economic connections to do so; and the Illuminati wants the same thing but they realize that they need the alien mind-control and abduction technology to accomplish their goals.”

Note: Branton uses “Illuminati” as the designation of the power-hungry, evil humans in control of the human participation in all this, including control over the researchers who are “in the know” and working daily with aliens.

“So then, it is more of a love-hate relationship. They collaborate in order to set up a planetary government, however both the humanoids and reptiloids are constantly plotting for the time when the world government arrives so that once it is established, they can move-in and take full control and expel the necessary collaborators — the humans doing away with the Greys or the Greys doing away with the humans or whatever the case may be. On the other hand, the Greys may continue negotiating with the humans while at the same time implanting micro-electronic mind-control devices in the human agents with whom they negotiate in order to ensure that they remain under ALIEN control once the planet succumbs. So a one-world government will NOT bring peace to the planet, it will merely be a matter of fighting for control of one super-government rather than for many smaller ones(end Branton quote)

ASTONISHING PARANORMAL RESEARCH:

At this point I would like to offer the testimony of a man we will call “Dale.” It is not his real name. He is a scientist but I promised I will not specify further. He managed to qualify to do research at Dulce, having gone through what he calls, “such an extensive security clearance as to be silly after a while.” The answer as to “why” such over-done security clearance is obvious; the human researchers at Dulce simply MUST keep their mouths shut, or else.

Dale's work was assisting experiments in the paranormal field. This is a current project at Dulce. In fact, it is one of their main objectives over the years. That realm, with its good and its bad, has not only been contacted but has been harnessed by Dulce research. "It is a matter of electromagnetics, different forms of it, and mastering them," says Dale.

Dale took medical leave from his work at Dulce; this was not a lie just to get out of there. He developed an unusual form of blood cancer. Even while he was being treated, they demanded he come back to work, but he did not. He had the back-up of several doctors who stuck their necks out for him. He is in remission but realized he cannot do that work anymore. Did his cancer come from the equipment used in the research he was involved in? He feels it did.

He greatly fears that Dulce operatives will show up at his door, tranquilize him, and God only knows what will happen to him, unless he leaves the country, pronto. Perhaps I should put that in the past tense, because I understand he has already left the United States, never to return. I hope this is correct for his sake.

He did not want to leave his family behind; he has no children and is divorced; he is especially close with his parents and grandparents. Since he probably will never be able to tell them where he is, it is most likely he won't see any of them again.

About a month ago, a friend of a friend knew of Dale, a current renegade and whistleblower from Dulce and my friend told me I should talk with him. That was not easy. Dale did not answer his phone, he would not answer emails. He simply would not acknowledge me.

Taking a chance of getting "them" after me, I sent my phone number to him and talked about myself, my experiences, and my work, in an email to him. He phoned me on a throw-away cell phone I had purchased, and we talked in a public park.

We struck a common chord, and he agreed then, to be tape recorded. Maria was the same, she knew she was leaving the country and needed to free her guilty conscience by getting the word out. Dale feels the same. These are basically good people, good Americans.

I interviewed Dale on March 20, 2021.

DALE'S ACCOUNT:

Dale: I don't want to go into a description of the place in general because I want to make this short. I think you mentioned you have a fairly detailed description of that place from another Dulce employee.

(Martin: Yes I do, from a brave woman we just call "Maria").

Dale: I want you to know, and tell other people, how those scumbags down underground, are messing up an entire world, an entire dimension. Yes, of course they are ruining our world but I am speaking of another world too. For lack of a better word, I'll call it the Paranormal Dimension. In it, are who or what - we call ghosts.

Are ghosts just dead people, like our beloved grandmother or our esteemed military soldiers? If so, what are these Dulce guys doing to our honored dead? Is this what awaits us after we die?

If ghosts are something or someone else, they are still in the natural order of things and should not be abused and tortured in some moron's experiments! It's not physical torture, they are not physical beings. It is spirit-torture or torture of the essence of them, whatever that is. The thing is too, these beings belong to some aspect of Earth and should not be fished out of where they are naturally, by mal-intentioned aliens from God-knows-where.

(Dale gets himself together and says more on this in a moment).

There are also natural but strange events wherein a premonition happens to someone or psychic information comes in. You know, the Psi World, remote viewing too. But these guys misuse these natural abilities which happen only once in a while for most humans. But, if ESP is opened up too much, too quickly, in a human, they will go mad soon enough. I could write a book just on this aspect of what the researchers do, and maybe I will – someday.

There is also poltergeist activity and when harnessed, when controlled, this stretches to levitation and invisibility. I also include little gremlins of sorts, demons maybe, who or which run around in their natural but strange dimension and should not be plucked out by aliens and their no-good human cohorts.

These little gremlin-entities have gotten loose from Dulce several times and they ruin the lives of individuals just living their lives, going to work every day. They think they are having mental health problems, or they jump to the explanation that they have been possessed by demons. These entities also replicate rather like viruses, so when one gets loose, it will spawn many others in the normal world.

In fact, like a tick looks for a host to suck blood from, these little entities are trying to survive themselves, getting the “stuff” from a human host which keeps these entities in existence. They are like a fish pulled out of home water, and so they madly seek any bit of “water” to keep them going, whereas their home dimension provided that “water” and there, they are a dimension away from humans, so no problem.

If Dulce researchers had not pulled them out of the home dimension, they would have stayed there.

And poltergeists, well, the guys at Dulce have found out how to reach the poltergeist world and basically, to make it do their bidding. They rape this paranormal dimension, they make it no longer natural but artificially manipulated and abused. I’m not sure they understand exactly “where” it is, I know they don’t give a damn about it as a sovereign dimension of existence. I can only hope some deity in the universe cares and reaps revenge on the Dulce researchers.

These idiots have above their door, this slogan, “We are entering an era of Technologicalization.” Their research topic is “The Paranormal” and so they are entering (invading) the Paranormal World and its Psychic Powers through advanced tech mostly. This includes the World of Dreams. Heaven help us! Yes, it is accomplished through high tech, not their expertise. I suppose they have some expertise, but you know what I mean.

The personnel of this project include human academics, of which I was one. I was far from the main one, they viewed me mostly as a flunky and I let them, because I soon realized I didn’t want to be there and did not want to help them succeed. I got involved because the money sounded great, and it was. I had not looked into the “urban legend” of Dulce, but if I had, I would not have believed a word of it, until I found out - it is mostly true. That is, it IS true but nothing is 100% of anything.

There were several kinds of aliens who came and went in this Project Paranormal, probably learning of progress and reporting back to their own group. Finding access to and even controlling human dreams, especially interested the Greys.

Somehow, this project cannot be allowed to continue or succeed in making it out of Dulce to affect the real world. Well, what am I talking about? It always DOES. But before it goes even farther!

Ghosts, ok, let me explain: Like I say, the Dulce guys probably still can’t tell you exactly who or what ghosts are, and neither can I, but through newly discovered frequencies and/or forms of electromagnetic energy, these guys can pull a ghost out of its natural place in the universe, wherever that is, and keep it (or him or her) in a contained space, a cage, in the lab. They can manipulate its impulses which amounts to teasing, torturing, and bullying it. This thing which is probably the ghost of a past person, whether from long ago or someone’s mother or child who just passed on recently, is teased and tortured under the guise of finding out more about it and its “process.”

They do the same with those little gremlins – they call them demons. But like I said, these creatures are in their own dimension, like a badger is in its own burrow, until they are pulled into the Dulce lab, as if a huge magnet is pulling on them, into the cage. It is specially wired with crazy EM frequencies to keep them in there and keep them “pliant.”

Needless to say, Dulce guys get into people’s dreams and then send the most horrific, frightening scenario, something to haunt the person for the rest of their life, even though it is “only a dream.” If this person only knew, it is not THEIR OWN DREAM, NOT THEIR OWN NIGHTMARE, NOT OF THEIR MAKING.

(Martin: Dale nearly screamed this, even though we spoke in low voices. It was not high volume but the emotion and tone were screams of anger, fear, and frustration).

As the person has this dream, actually, this nightmare, all his neuroreceptors are mapped and connected to their mechanism, and they can thought-control him. And they usually do.

The thing is, how does a person tell when his thoughts are not his own? I might be aware of this but the normal person does not even think such a thing. “Of course, it is my thoughts in my head.”

The person says, “These thoughts of mine tell me who to vote for, or how to go against my country, or how to run people down with my car. Or who to love and who to hate.” BUT THEY ARE NOT THAT PERSON’S THOUGHTS.

They can send “fake” psychic messages into a person’s head, too. In that case, the person does know it is something “strange” which is in their head, which just sort of “beamed in” but the person feels they are a gifted psychic then. In fact, it is some evil researchers far away just improving their equations and equipment by planting crap in his head.

Poltergeist activity is another force they are corrupting. I say “corrupting” because poltergeists are scary in their own right and can have an evil feel as they slam doors and toss furniture. But my point is, they have a natural world or a natural frequency, somewhere, an earth-dimension of force or even sentient energies which seem screwed up to us.

But, these guys at Dulce brought “it” into their laboratory, and at first it was so funny because it was out of control, as a poltergeist loves to be. All the stuff in the lab flew all over the place, smashed into walls, it was really helter-skelter! A lot of shit was broken, expensive technology and equipment. Three researchers got smashed and had to get medical attention. When I say “smashed,” I mean, they were literally smashed by this force they had snagged in its own dimension. Sure, it comes and goes in haunted houses rather like a predatory animal on the prowl, but you don’t want to trap and try to confine it!

Unfortunately, the Dulce gang figured out how to harness this force and got it marching to their demands. They could then levitate anything, they levitated an anvil by connecting to the poltergeist energy, draining it.

They could make anything or anyone disappear and then reappear, and one researcher managed to walk through a wall like nothing was there. However, he was grossly insane after that and, that was the end of him. I never saw him again. No great loss.

Look, Martin, I know I sound flippant and smart-aleck but it is the only way I can handle this horrific knowledge I possess. I have developed so much scorn, hatred and, I admit, fear of "the Dulce gang" that I sometimes feel like some smart-mouth-not-wanna-be-hero in a corny horror film. As a kid, I loved the classic horror flicks like NIGHT OF THE LIVING DEAD and BASKET CASE, and reality turns out to be just as horrific, or worse.

I went to a good university, I worked hard, I knew I was smart and was very proud of the degree and what it meant, which I attained. My parents and grandparents were so proud, too. But it has all crumbled to nothing – less than nothing, really. I am not sure how I will live as the years go by in a country which is not mine. I have a whole new language to learn in order to survive and maybe find work. I blew it. But, I thought I was taking an academic position in a facility under the auspices of the U.S. Department of Energy. That's what I thought.

Anyway, I need to get going, I don't stay in one place out in the open very long. If you were expecting me to give you a big scenario of what aliens are fighting what other aliens out in the galaxy, and what all of their agendas are, you are asking the wrong guy.

I went down into hell, to work, as long as I could. I was in New Mexico, United States, Planet Earth. I saw aliens, the so-called Golden Humans, who are very human-like, and then the Reptilians who seemed to have a particular interest in the Paranormal Project. I didn't like that, but what could I do about it? And for all I know, the Golden Humans (I believe Travis Walton called them that), are really the worst of all. I suspect they are better than most types that are working within Dulce but I don't really know.

The Greys give me the absolute creeps. I seemed to be guided to feel there is something missing in them which made them the creepiest. It was not the physical aspect I minded, I could get used to that, but I suspect it was that my intuitive ability could sense no soul, no spirit, within them. I heard that they are soulless clones but that was gossip. I am a scientist and that is a very subjective observation. I have no evidence for how I feel.

And that's the thing, I have no solid evidence on any of it but I do know what I tell you about Project Paranormal is true. I worked on it as a scientist, however little contribution I made. I have to say, I hope I made NO contribution to this evil project, but I suppose I contributed something.

I have tried to read up on Dulce recently and my head spins. No doubt much of it is true but I can't help but wish there was a book which did stick to some tested truth rather than wild conjecture and tales told with no proof or evidence, and all that kind of conspiracy stuff, because the actual truth is horrific. Martin, maybe your book will be that book.

I gotta go. All the best in your endeavor."

And with that, Dale got up and jogged away. He had worn jogging clothes, so that was appropriate. I wanted to say to him that I do agree on his final point regarding how to approach the topic of Dulce, as well as Montauk. I have no idea what is going on out in the galaxy, I have no idea of alien politics, who signed what galactic treaty with whom, or if Reptilians are the worst or maybe it is the Tall Whites or the Greys.

We have to focus on the Planet Earth, USA, Archuleta Mesa, underground monstrosity tagged "Dulce," and come together as Americans and as Humans, not forcing the farthest-out galactic theories on each other, but simply share compassionate concern over what is happening in America, which is not approved by the American people, nor even known about by the majority of citizens.

When things get so incredible in content, we lose many people's attention because it sounds just too crazy. Are we listening to gossip, to tall tales, or to evidence and near-proof? I would hope the latter.

Now maybe there is not a shred of craziness to any of the tales and theories, it may be that every word in every tale is true, but, again, we need to focus on what we are able to expose and thus change. Somehow this monstrosity has to stop.

Let's take a look at the supernatural aspects of the land under which Dulce sits because I know this is why Dulce is situated exactly where it is. They wanted a head start, a ready-made catalyst to enhance their bizarre paranormal research. This also applies to Point Montauk.

The Land of the Jicarilla Apache is a psychically active area. The Jicarilla people know that something is there, and they respect it. Their cultural and spiritual beliefs include the probability that their ancestors, or some branch of them, may have come from underground in this area. In fact, this is in common with many of the Native-American legends in the U.S., including those of the Hopi.

So, is it any wonder they don't want to get involved in Dulce, a huge secret facility of the white Establishment, which researches and uses this psychic, supernatural energy? They gain financially from Dulce UFO tourism, and most have witnessed UFOs and other strangeness in the area they but generally do not want involvement beyond that. The UFOs and strangeness are inherent and natural in their area, but Dulce is a monstrosity.

There are parallels between the Archuleta Mesa and the Skinwalker Ranch area. In both locations there may be time/space portals, either on the surface, below the surface, or in the sky overhead. Or, the portal might run through all three.

This portal might be a passageway for alien ships, warping space from many light years away, to arrive here. Do these alien groups ever plan to go to back their homes? If so, the passageway (wormhole) would also be their corridor to their home.

There might be alternate realities that share this vortex and coexist with our 3D, physical world. This would connect not to extraterrestrials but to ultra-terrestrial beings who belong to other dimensions of Earth. This could also include time travelers or those of parallel dimensions.

The Archuleta portal could be a natural one, Earth does have natural portals. Or it could have been created by a group of ancient aliens. Another possibility is that Apache ancestors had powerful Shamanistic skills in the old days and created it in this exact spot. We do know that the Dulce Installation is in that spot for specific reasons, to avail itself of strong psychic energy.

Could it be possible that the cruelty, the torture, the incredibly terrible research, all goes on in an alternate reality which is accessed at some point within Dulce? Perhaps at Level 3? Or Level 4?

Is Dulce built exactly on that portal so that entrance to the other world simply happens by being in there?

I think not. My whistleblowers whom we call Maria and Dale, give no indication of Dulce itself being built as a psychic access to that which is simply there. Also, people have been hurt and killed in a very real way. All the gruesome experiments are not a psychic mirage. I do not perceive how they could take place in an alternate reality. They take place HERE.

The area which Dulce is in, has long been the home of Bigfoot, there are many sightings going back hundreds of years. Bigfoot is particularly at home in the nearby Navajo River area, and apparitions of various types are common.

In the Dulce area, there are unidentifiable sounds and chanting from time to time, usually in a little-populated forest or wilderness area. Some believe these are Native war-chants, but time and time again, there is no one there – no one who is visible.

I know a paranormal researcher who lives in Colorado, just over the border from northern New Mexico where Dulce is. He and his friend were hiking in the wilderness as they enjoyed doing once or twice a year. This time, they got more than they bargained for; first they were surrounded by grunting noises but after careful checking all around, they could see no animal or people.

They had decided the grunting was a natural phenomenon, perhaps a waterfall echoing or something, when a chant began – a very clear native chant. It had human intonation and cadence. Both men were now beginning to feel slightly ill and they wondered if the provisions they had just eaten, were spoiled. “Just what we needed out in the wilderness, upset stomachs!”

Next thing they knew, it was four hours later! As they tried to “come to” and think clearly, they wondered if they accidentally ate poisonous mushrooms. However, they had eaten NO mushrooms that they could remember. Peyote? They certainly had not partaken of it, either. My friend said that being a paranormal researcher, his mind began to race over all the strange and probably frightening possibilities.

They both wanted to call a halt to this particular adventure and head home, so as they got their gear together, my friend clearly saw a brilliant light in the sky on the southern horizon which was going too fast to be a plane, helicopter, or drone. He swears it was going parallel to the ground or angling slightly upward, so not a meteor. They had a clear view of it in the spot they had camped, and Dulce was perhaps 30 miles in that same direction.

My friend quickly called his friend’s attention to the UFO but his friend had been bent down, tussling with the tent, and by the time he stood up, the light had zapped out. However, this suggested to my friend that they might have had an alien abduction instead of having fallen victim to an ancient occult, possibly Native experience.

Until that time, he had stuck primarily to researching the paranormal but this opened up the huge UFO enigma to him as well. The two are often linked together somehow, as Jacques Vallee and many others, have tended to believe.

I know for a fact that there is also advanced research going on at Dulce in holograms and in augmented reality (“augmented reality” is different than alternate reality). Of course, we have both of these innovations in the world with us now but in their advanced forms, they are something we can only imagine.

Wikipedia defines augmented reality: “Augmented reality (AR) is an interactive experience of a real-world environment where the objects that reside in the real world are enhanced by computer-generated perceptual information, sometimes across multiple sensory modalities, including visual, auditory, haptic (touch), somasensory, and olfactory.

“Somasensory” has to do with the dreamstate.

“AR can be defined as a system that incorporates three basic features: a combination of real and virtual worlds, real-time interaction, and accurate 3D registration of virtual and real objects. The overlaid sensory information can be constructive or destructive. This experience is seamlessly interwoven with the physical world such that it is perceived as an immersive aspect of the real environment. In this way, augmented reality alters one’s ongoing perception of a real-world environment, whereas virtual reality completely replaces the user’s real-world environment with a simulated one. Augmented reality is related to two largely synonymous terms: mixed reality and computer-mediated reality.”

This makes my head spin but when I try to apply it to some of the events and research at Dulce, I see how it could be used by them. I believe there is a blend of our real world, augmented reality, holograms, and alternate realities being researched and experimented upon, at Dulce.

Norio Hayakawa, respected UFO researcher who is one of the main investigators of Dulce, says, “There’s also a lot of government disinformation out there. I know there were some holographic things going on,” (at Dulce).

Why would researchers tamper with this crazy brew of “realities”? I feel that there is an over-arching goal of altering consciousness itself. All of these forms of “reality,” depend on an individual’s consciousness in order to be perceived.

Of course, they could use simple, old “mind control” which Montauk pioneered, but that usually involves a smaller area of impact than impact on the collective human consciousness itself. Also, it is more work to keep “mind control” functioning. But to change consciousness is to affect a lasting change – a change in how humans think, feel, and behave.

This change would include the subconscious and the dream consciousness, not just the waking consciousness which perceives the world for each individual.

As for holograms being just something advertisers do to bring back a dead entertainer like Elvis Presley to sing a duet with a current celebrity, this is the most elementary stage of holograms.

In fact, cutting edge physics now hypothesizes that the universe itself could be a hologram and/or that the event horizons of black holes are actually holograms which contain all information in the universe, however large or small, the smallest details of us and our lives – and of every life, every least thing, in the universe. This is similar to the religious and also metaphysical concept of the Akashic Records.

The Cosmic Hologram, key aspects: (from Google Information)

1. Information is more fundamental than energy-matter, and space-time.

2. Our Universe is innately in-formed by information and holographically manifest.

3. Mind doesn't somehow arise from matter. Mind IS matter and matter IS mind.

4. The laws of physics, restated in terms of information, are instructions; the informational algorithms of unified reality that enable our Universe to exist and evolve as a coherent entity.

5. Restated in this way, they are the Physics of Evolution.

Black holes are the most powerful objects in the universe. Nothing, not even light, can escape the gravitational pull of a black hole. Astronomers now believe there are billions of black holes out in the cosmos, swallowing up planets, even entire stars in violent feeding frenzies. New theoretical research into the twisted reality of black holes suggests that three-dimensional space could be an illusion and that reality actually takes place on a two-dimensional hologram at the edge of the universe. (end Google quote)

I have included this theoretical information on holograms to say, they are not just about making a hologram of Judy Garland at Carnegie Hall or Nat King Cole, singing with his daughter. Holograms may be responsible for providing the nature of our very existence, and that of the universe.

We feel awe and wonder at what might be the reality of the universe. Black holes which gobble all time, space, light, gravity, and matter, are almost beyond the human ability to comprehend, but such is the way of the universe. However, to have Dulce researchers, who have little or no integrity or moral compass, fiddling with advanced holograms and augmented reality, is frightening.

Finally in our examination of Dulce, comes its genetic engineering project. Like Nazi eugenics, the apparent attempts by Dulce researchers have not only altered genes but taken genes from one species, then snipped genes from several other species, and created tragic, disastrous, un-natural new creatures.

AT DULCE, MAN IS PLAYING GOD,

A CRUEL GOD, AT THAT:

Google Definition of Genetic Engineering:

Genetic engineering is the process of using recombinant DNA (rDNA) technology to alter the genetic makeup of an organism. Genetic engineering involves the direct manipulation of one or more genes. Most often, a gene from another species is added to an organism's genome to give it a desired phenotype.

From THE DULCE WARS by B. Branton -

Overt and Covert Research:

"… the Lawrence Berkeley Laboratory and New Mexico's Los Alamos National Laboratory house advanced genetic research centers as part of a Project to decipher the Human Genome. The Genome holds the genetically coded instructions that guide the transformation of a single cell - a fertilized egg - into a Biological Being.

"'The Human Genome Project' may well have the greatest direct impact on humanity of any scientific initiative before us today", said David Shirley,

Director of the Berkeley Laboratory.

“Covertly, this research has also been going on for years, at DULCE Labs.”

Branton goes on to give examples of terrible experiments in genetic engineering at Dulce in an area called Nightmare Hall: “These are experiments such as multi-legged humans, Reptilian-humans, winged humanoids, bat-like creatures, genetic manipulations of species like fish, seals, birds mice – this gene from one, that gene from another, mixed together to make new creatures. All of these are held in cages,” says Branton.

“Level #7 is worse, row after row of thousands of humans and human-mixtures in cold storage. Here too are embryo storage vats of humanoids in various stages of development.” (Branton)

I have made the decision not to elaborate because we have no way of knowing if this was true or is still true. I respect Branton, but these reports are so horrendous, and go on in great details, that I would have to be certain of them, to give them a lot of space in my book. I do not know who reported these specific atrocities and so I cannot vet them as I have my whistleblowers and contacts.

It could be that the government feeds us extreme scenarios of disinformation so they can continue to carry on their actual research, which is also evil, also wrong, but meanwhile, we, the curious ones, have been steered down a rabbit hole. I am not saying this is specifically true of Dulce’s genetic engineering, but since most of us have read other books on Dulce which cover individual atrocities, I would now like to look at the larger atrocities being done to the human genome and thus to the human race.

As I have said, Dulce needs to become public knowledge so then we can get it stopped or at least regulated to a great degree. To be successful someday (hopefully soon), we have to present truth and deal with truth. We have to be certain of our sources.

What has been written about Dulce, has not gone into the specifics of how altering genes not only can be a devastating nightmare to that individual, but ultimately to us all, including our grandchildren and their children, because scissoring-out this gene or that gene, and effectively creating this mutation in our human genome, will be passed down, one way or the other, to our offspring and their offspring.

Once a gene is engineered (altered), it will pop up in the next generation, and in the generation after that. So the natural path of human evolution is tampered with, and this could be (and eventually will be) catastrophic. It is an “accident” (mutation) waiting to happen which spells doom for the human species.

Instead of re-reading about one man who is whimpering in pain and despair because he is half human and half octopus, courtesy of Dulce, let me offer what I have learned about CRISPR and genetic engineering. The researchers at Dulce are most certainly doing these things, as are other genetic researchers who push the limit, make their own rules, and “go ahead and do it!” just because they can.

Will they be admonished by academia? Maybe. But in the case of clandestine installations like Dulce, NO, they will not be admonished, they are encouraged, they are funded, and in fact, it is expected that they do dangerous and crazy “snipping” of our genes.

This does not stop with the poor victim they did it to, because if he does manage to have offspring, that extreme change (“snip”) of our human genetic code, will be passed on and spread eventually into the future population.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

FROM GENETIC SCIENCE ITSELF

Question: What does CRISPR stand for?

Answer: Clustered regularly interspaced short palindromic repeats

Question: Why is CRISPR dangerous and unethical?

Answer: The application of CRISPR-Cas9 in the germline is considered more problematic because of the risk of causing various mutations and side effects and transferring undesirable changes to future generations. It can create mutations elsewhere in the genome, known as ‘off-target’ modifications. Off-target effects are random and can unduly influence other genes or regions of the genome.

Question: Do subjects die during this research and procedure? Is “transgenesis” automatically desirable?

Answer: No, transgenesis is not automatically desirable.

Look at one case, Jesse Gelsinger, an American teen who died in a botched gene-therapy trial in 1999. To avoid such deaths, and the chilling effect that they can have on research, this research, if allowed at all, must move cautiously before editing the genome of embryos.

And yet, Dulce has and is doing it with no regulation or stop signs.

Question: Does the harm stop with the subject who becomes the victim of a botched procedure or miscalculation in the “snipping” of the gene?

Answer: “Gene surgery” has therefore only posed a number of foreseeable and unforeseeable risks, to the babies themselves and their future progeny, without providing any obvious medical benefit. Genetic misadventure also holds little scientific merit and reflects poorly designed experimentation.

Question: Do we know what unforeseen damage these new mutations (due to gene snipping), will do?

Answer: Altering the genome constitutes substantial changes that could alter how a gene works. If research is not controlled but is done in secret with a “carte blanche ok,” the careful steps of research are leapfrogged over. All of those basic checks and trials are ignored. Human children are test subjects for variants that haven’t been vetted in animals yet. What’s shocking about this “is the blatant disregard of all the established rules and conventions.

Question: Gene-scissoring (snipping of genes) or “gene surgery,” isn’t this progress? Often a “designer baby” is then created for a wealthy couple.

Answer: This procedure poses a number of foreseeable and unforeseeable risks, to the babies themselves and their future progeny, without providing any obvious medical benefit. It is genetic misadventure which could alter the human genome of all humans in the future as dangerous genes are introduced into offspring if those babies, when they grow up, have children and grandchildren. Genome-editing technologies such as CRISPR have been shown to generate unwanted changes to genes, and can produce a range of different outcomes even among cells in the same embryo.

Question: As “wild west” gene snipping continues to go on secretly, can any good come out of what they discover or create?

Answer: If safe gene-snipping procedures are ever developed, they will then be paid for by the rich only. Money is always at the root of it!

Here is the basic truth: People shouldn’t be edited out of existence in some version of a utopian future.

Genome editing is a powerful, scientific technology that can reshape medical treatments and people’s lives, but it can also harmfully reduce human diversity and increase social inequality by editing out the kinds of people that medical science, and the society has shaped, categorizing them as diseased or genetically contaminated—people who are labeled as having “bad genes.” (Thanks to Scientific American for this clarity of concept).

Somehow it is implied that these genes (and these people, therefore) can automatically be used as test subjects and that they have no right to the pride they have as THEMSELVES, as they ARE, and pride in what they have overcome.

Bad genes: even when there is a physical handicap involved, should not assumed to need change or genetic snipping or coupling with other “alien” genes not from our own body. Pride in overcoming and identity of the individual are very important, too, perhaps more important than wildly trying to get rid of the “bad genes.”

Before tinkering at all with the human genome, there should be study on the people born with edited genomes and their children, to understand the mental and physical health effects of the procedure for generations to come.

Of course, this is the farthest idea from the minds of the Dulce genetics-engineering researchers, both human and alien. They have the freedom to do whatever the hell they want, apparently. Their evil extends beyond reports of human/animal or human/alien hybrids, cruelly done to both species involved (to all species involved), in the Dulce lab.

I would like to close the Dulce chapter with “Maria’s” second session, which is contains glimpses of genetic engineering which she witnessed in the ten months she had access to Levels 3 through 6 at Dulce.

MARIA: The Genetics Section and the Paranormal Project, which you mention, Martin, that another confidante has told you about, are areas which I glimpsed from the inner corridors.

In other words, I was IN their allotted area but it was forbidden for me to go into the actual research rooms and so I did not. Most had closed doors. I also was not that brave and was very glad that rule gave me an excuse to give to myself, for not pushing forward into those rooms.

The Paranormal Project was wild because more than once I heard bangs and commotions, screeches, all sorts of unidentifiable noises, coming from behind closed doors. There was also a smell which wafted from their rooms into the corridor, which was just—well, the worst smell ever! It made me almost gag. Sometimes it was worse than other times. It smelled like rotting flesh.

Those two sections cover a lot of floor space. They have their private corridors with doors (offices, experimental rooms) on each side. I think each alien contingent has their own genetic and/or paranormal projects with a few human researchers assigned to each. I guess this is because humans are playing host to these aliens but, it is my impression that “humans” are not much respected or bowed to at Dulce research, quite the opposite.

I do know that there was a large room in the Genetics Section which held large containers or vats. It had a double door which swung open and shut differently than a regular door, so I got a few glimpses.

I know how this image fits in with various accounts of them “growing” hybrid embryos and similar terrible things. I got a glimpse of huge vats, that's all I know except for those rumors and reports in some Dulce books about what or who was in the vats.

Which brings me to, in the upper levels of Level 1 and 2, there is the most annoying, ridiculous cheeriness and shallowness. You would think they worked at the First National Bank or maybe the library. You might think I would have heard rumors from them, you'd think that would bother them. I guess they were so scared that, if they lasted for a while working there, they were able to keep their mouths absolutely shut as to anything wrong, or actually, about ANYTHING going on. It was like those lower levels were non-existent or maybe the lower floors of a department store.

So, I had worked there almost two years and had been going "downstairs" for about ten of those months. One morning I was called in, completely unexpected, and grilled for 9 hours at one sitting because someone had done a "security inventory" and realized I did not have clearance for the lower levels and yet, went down there.

At the end of those 9 hours of hell, they demanded my resignation and I quickly gave it. But that was the least of it. They would take turns repeating, pounding in, these lines, "You will be followed until the day you die wherever you go, so you cannot report back to whoever your handlers are. If you so much as make a wrong move to betray your country, you will be dealt with swiftly and quietly."

I had to leave with none of my stuff from my desk. One of the men said I would need an escort to come back to get my stuff but then another gruff old guy said I could not get my stuff at all.

So, I stumbled out of Dulce that evening and that was that. A lot of their interrogation is a blur, my mind has blocked a lot of it.

I thought that was that and maybe they were just blowing steam, and I planned to move across country as soon as I could. But, terrible events were happening in my personal life. My family, whom I planned to go to, were getting anonymous death threats. They did not understand but I knew it was because of me (I did manage to explain to them a bit later).

And, I was being harassed as if by an insane teenager because there were dead animals thrown in my yard, my house (a small rental) was vandalized with my personal underwear and stuff, cut to shreds.

The phone rang often with threatening messages as if from the worst horror flick you might ever imagine. Intimidating, low voiced males told me what they were going to do to me.

My computer was hacked multiple times. I figured spyware or something was added to my computer so I didn't even use it. I did not book plane tickets online. When I needed to book plane tickets, I went to a travel agency, having driven miles to a city. I knew something about checking for GPS devices on my car, and found one. Luckily I found it before I went to get the plane tickets. I decommissioned any tech devices I had or found, in my house or car.

The day finally came, it seemed like forever but it was eleven days. Exhausted, stressed, traumatized, I sneaked out and after a long drive, I got to the airport. I abandoned my car at the airport. I had dyed my hair, cut it short. I hoped I did not look like me.

I left all my personal stuff in the rental house, just walked away from all of it and took 2 small bags only. I had a sometime boyfriend whom I did not trust, rightly or wrongly, and I disappeared, never telling him I was going or where I went.

I was so worn down by that time, full of fear, paranoia, and hatred, mad at myself for those ten months of going against my security clearance, furious at "them," those gruff, reactionary, nasty old men – and I was so low on sleep!

I was a mess and a ball of nerves until I got on the plane and then I fell asleep almost instantly and did not wake up until landing on the east coast. But I will leave the east coast too now, very soon.

If this was the "good old days" at Dulce, I'd be dead or perhaps in one of those vats, ready to be experimented upon. I am sure they probably figured out where I went, they have their methods, but hopefully they will be satisfied and leave me alone in another country. Of course, I am hoping they can't find me.

I'll likely be exiled for life, and maybe, just maybe, they won't even know where I went. Martin, I know your book will come out much later than my departure, so if I accidentally have given any hints, I will at least be long gone.

(Martin: In fact, she left in 2015 and this is 2021. I wish her all the luck in the world, all the best!)

CHAPTER SEVEN:

AREA 51 ORIGINS

Area 51 is one of the most covert military bases on American soil, protecting the nation's most confidential research and development. However, could Area 51 also be holding secrets - secrets so incredible as to make it the third link in the Montauk, Dulce triangle?

Certainly, the tunnels run directly from one to another, Montauk to Dulce to Area 51. There is mag-lev "bullet train" service for the higher ups (both alien and human), or for the transportation of "above top secret" discoveries and materials, such as the astounding "metamaterials," which may hold the key to zero-gravity craft.

STEPHEN BASSETT is an exo-political activist and a leading advocate for ending the 65-year government-imposed truth embargo regarding an extraterrestrial presence engaging the human race. He is the executive director of the Paradigm Research Group (PRG) which produced a "Citizen Hearing on Disclosure" in 2013. Stephen has spoken to audiences around the world about the implications of formal Disclosure of the extraterrestrial presence, and his advocacy work has been extensively covered by national and international media.

On Area 51, Bassett says, "Congress hasn't the slightest idea what's going on in these facilities, and Congress couldn't get in if they wanted to.

Area 51 might surprise the people from Congress with:

1. — at least some of the material from the Roswell crash which is known to have gone to Area 51.

2.— entire rows of hangars with a flying saucer in each hangar.

3. — aliens of a variety of species from different planets and dimensions, working on craft there, even supervising as humans try to build their own saucers with warp ability.

This is only a partial list, but of course "alien bodies" and "live aliens" are probably the most earthshaking on our list. Both have been at Area 51 for many years. Indeed, just 83 miles north from the bright lights of Las Vegas, in the middle of the Nevada high desert, lies the most well-known secret location in America; for more than 66 years, the government has officially chosen Area 51 as the citadel of secrecy, the center for black ops which are entirely “off the books.” Area 51 has held our deepest, darkest projects in conjunction with Montauk and Dulce.

Incidentally, it was built in 1955 on what was Paradise Ranch.

Popular Mechanics once stated that it is the place where the U.S. government goes to be alone. No private citizen, who pays for all this with his or her taxes, is allowed in. The infamous outpost is so top secret, it has been erased from maps since its inception.

Strange lights in the night sky (unidentified flying objects), and impenetrable security surround the mysterious facility and have helped fuel speculation and curiosity about what really goes on at Area 51. Is it any wonder that for decades, the military base has been shrouded with dark, sinister conspiracy theories?

But is there any truth to the seemingly fantastic tales told by so many over the years about Area 51? Or might there be an extravagant government cover-up to obscure the real and highly classified activities of the base? Disinformation? Is the truth about the activities at Area 51 even stranger than fiction?

Officials insist the secrecy surrounding sites like Area 51 is essential for national security, and the covert technology created and tested there has saved countless American lives. Official says, “You need places like Area 51,” and “It’s a place to test our most secret stuff.”

Examples: It is no exaggeration to say the Cold War was won at Area 51.

It’s an area of the Nevada desert that, during World War II, was just a gunnery range. Lockheed needed a place with long, long runways for the development of the U-2 spy plane. And they chose this old gunnery range in Nevada, which then became Nelis Air Force Base, Groom Lake and Papoose Lake.

In the 1950s, when this base was first developed, the United States had a lot of secret agencies that the rest of the world didn’t know anything about. Ironically, there were Soviet-era satellite images of the facility with operations going on there, and yet on our own satellites, it would all be digitized out.

So, the Soviet Union knew that we had super-secret programs there, but we were still denying to our own citizens that such a facility existed. However, in July of 2003, the U. S. government publicly confirmed the existence of the military base.

Today, Area 51 is officially described simply as an operating location for the development and testing of experimental aircraft and weapons systems.

Called The Box, there is a strictly enforced no-fly zone above the base.

Some claim that The Box is the nexus of a so-called Nevada Triangle, where thousands of planes have mysteriously crashed and disappeared.

Area 51 is a highly classified airspace and base and it is the size of some small states. The airspace that they control is a huge area of classified airspace, and that means that commercial aircraft are routed around that area. You cannot just fly in there and look at what's going on. They will launch interceptor planes to come chase you away and possibly, to "get you."

Area 51 is ideal for conducting secret projects. It lies in a deep valley surrounded by mountains, so it's not easily observed from the outside. It sits in the middle of a 625-square-mile block of restricted airspace where they conduct mock combat exercises, including air-to-air combat, bombing and gunnery practice.

In addition, Area 51's located right next to the Nevada Test Site, where nearly a thousand nuclear weapons were tested, both above and below ground. It is a very remote and forbidding place.

A sophisticated high-tech security system surrounds the massive base, ensuring that intruders will not penetrate the perimeter. Guards, known as Cammo Dudes, are authorized to use deadly force, when necessary, to stop any and all trespassers.

Some believe the security even stretches to public roads, where surveillance censors may be hidden. There are electronic sensors that are placed along the ground and there may be sensors, we're told, that can detect your heat signature. That's helpful at the daytime, but it's especially helpful at night, if you try to sneak in.

There are very sophisticated microphones, and they're actually hidden in the bushes. There are motion sensors with small cameras that are mounted, all around the area. There are also snipers working at Area 51.

In June 1997, an article in Popular Mechanics magazine claimed that Area 51 had been closed down and abandoned. But many informants and other evidence illustrate that this is not true. Despite the fact they regret (and are annoyed) at the popularity of Area 51 among the UFO and alien hunting public, the top-secret work continues and, in fact, has no doubt expanded in recent years.

Over the past decade, satellite images have revealed new runways, hangars, buildings and radar facilities. And every day, secret so-called "Janet flights" carry workers from Las Vegas directly in and out of Area 51.

There is a EG & G terminal at McCarran Airport which takes you to the test site, and you fly in a white 737 jet, unmarked, with a red strip down each of the fuselage sides.

This may have been changed slightly in the present time; it has been a while since I came across this precise information. This is the only gateway to Area 51.

You cannot drive your car to Area 51, but you can take their designated bus if you work there. There's no such thing as commuting personally to Area 51. It doesn't exist.

Before stepping foot on the base, employees and their families undergo an intense background check to ensure they will maintain complete secrecy.

But perhaps the most secure aspect of the base is the fact that even the workers don't really know what goes on there. Each specific project (and its area within Area 51) is known to others only on a "need to know" basis.

Workers are encouraged not talk to each other. They must never ask, "Just what do you do?" If you don't have a need to know, and you just don't ask. Workers at the base typically have a top secret clearance, but access within each project is strictly compartmentalized. It is a base of compartmentalized strangers.

When classified Northrop aircraft is tested at Area 51, people who work in the Lockheed skunk works laboratory are told to bring the shades down and never to look out the window, as the other aircraft is taxiing by. One doesn't even know what the other is doing.

The veil of secrecy that surrounds Area 51 has fueled the conspiracy theories about what goes on there. Claims range from the testing of chemical and biological warfare weapons to time-travel machines and alien technology – and aliens. Area 51 didn't become known because we tested our secret aircraft there, it became known because people made the claim that there was this place called Area 51 where we tested flying saucers.

Accounts began to leak out of that facility of people who had seen unusual things going on there, related to so-called reverse engineering of extraterrestrial vehicles and to new research and to our aerospace programs.

Could the secret research and development at Area 51 include extraterrestrial technology? What, or perhaps who, is being hidden at Area 51?

ROSWELL AND MAJOR JESSE MARCEL

In February, 1980, Air Force Major Jesse Marcel made headlines across the country after giving a controversial interview about his eyewitness account of the infamous Roswell incident.

After a whooshing noise, and a thundering explosion, a saucer-shaped UFO fell from the sky near Roswell, New Mexico, on July 8, 1947, explained Major Marcel.

He then claimed the military had covered up the recovery of this alien spaceship that crashed near Roswell. He stated that there were dead aliens in the wreckage. The original press release from the Roswell Army Airfield stated exactly what Major Marcel stated, and 500 people went on public record that they had knowledge of this too.

Many speculate that the material recovered from the crash was taken to Area 51.

The story broke and then was carried around the world, opening up a Pandora's box which has not closed.

The alien bodies were taken to Wright-Patterson Air Force Base in Ohio for autopsy, dissection, and study.

If you were to recover something like a downed flying saucer, where would you take it? You'd take it to Area 51. It is the location of choice for testing and developing black projects. It is the place to reverse-engineer alien craft. It's the place where you know you can keep a secret.

In a sensational interview with investigative reporter George Knapp in November, 1989, physicist Bob Lazar reveals shocking details about his work in Area 51.

Lazar used a pseudonym, Dennis, which was actually a first name of the guy he said was his boss at Area 51.

Having worked at the base from 1988 to 1989, Lazar claimed to have seen nine mysterious discs in an area of the facility called Sector Four or S4. And he told this incredible story:

He had been hired by the U. S. Navy to work at a place called S4, south of Area 51 on the Papoose Lake dry lake bed. There, a facility had been built into the mountains, a series of hangars, and inside each of these hangars, which were designed to look like the desert, was a flying saucer.

Lazar said the craft looked unusual in the sense there were nor rivets or bolts or anything like that that you would see on a regular aircraft. It was almost like they'd come out of a mold.

"They just seemed to be like a melted and, you know, sealed, solid, solidified device where you couldn't really see how they'd been put together," exclaimed Lazar.

He also said that the craft were powered by antimatter reactors and that the fuel was something called element 115. He claimed that at one point he saw one being test-flown over the dry lakebed and that it glowed blue and floated as if by magic.

In 2021, Robert Lazar is still a matter of contention in the UFO community. Some investigators feel he told the truth, despite lies he told about his background and a history of legal misdemeanors.

Others feel that he was not telling the truth and that information on him, now public, shows he is a liar.

At any rate, after that story began to circulate, Area 51 became a mecca for UFO enthusiasts. People came from all over the United States and all over the world, descending upon Area 51, looking for UFOs and for a while, there were tourists on the hilltops all hours a day, seven days a week. And so, the Air Force seized an additional 5,000 acres of public land to take away these hilltops.

In 2004, biologist Dan Burisch corroborated the sensational claims of Bob Lazar.

As a scientist who had also worked at Sector Four, Burisch said the super-secret facility housed not only nine extraterrestrial vehicles, but also an alien being.

Burisch's account is that he's a microbiologist who has done work inside the Groom Lake facility, dealing with alien biology (ET biology). He's claimed, furthermore, that he was selected for his work because he was able to have telepathic connection with the main being (UFO occupant) he dealt with, which he called J-Rod.

J-Rod was kept in a kind of quasi-captivity, working with a select group of American scientists. If indeed they are retro-engineering UFOs, and particularly if they have alien bodies or, even live aliens, then that is a secret that is world-shaking.

Had Lazar and Burisch actually witnessed extraterrestrial technology at Sector Four? And if so, was there a link to the mysterious crash at Roswell in 1947? In response to the extraterrestrial claims, the Air Force released an official report in 1994 stating the debris found and recovered at Roswell came from a top secret experiment of theirs called Project Mogul.

The report claimed that accounts of alien aircraft were simply misidentified crashed military balloons that were used to detect radiation in the upper atmosphere. The Air Force said that the materials which were recovered were from their balloon and that you can see in a photograph of Jesse Marcel, that he was holding the balloon material. "This is clearly the Mogul balloon apparatus," said the Air Force.

Just a few years later in 1997, the Air Force issued another report, explaining that the alleged alien bodies were, in fact, dummies attached to parachutes as part of the high-altitude experiment.

In other words, the Air Force has presented an assortment of explanations; this certainly begs the question, “What’s going on if you have to keep changing your story?” There have been a lot of explanations, none of which make sense, and there’s a lot of evidence that, in fact, we did retrieve an extraterrestrial vehicle there.

Many of these conspiracy theories and UFO sightings probably help to hide the operations of the secret base, because if people see something strange and report it as a UFO, they are not taken seriously.

Which brings us to the fact Dan Burisch was also discredited; it was said he lied about his background as well as his J-Rod account. This is just like Paul Bennewitz, Phil Schneider, and others when they tried to expose what was going on at Dulce, they were called insane, con men, or compulsive liars. Was the truth about them exposed? Or were they smeared with a disinformation campaign – and they were telling the truth.

One thing is clear in retrospection: Whistleblowers in the UFO/alien field are almost always, smeared by debunking experts; the debunkers seem to be experts at smearing, in my opinion. It is undeniable that this is the easiest, quickest way to try to get rid of the credibility of someone who is telling an amazing account which exposes the UFO/alien reality in our world.

Of course, then a new, brave whistleblower (or liar) comes along because it is handy and part of the agenda for the government, I feel, to keep the whole syndrome going. Meanwhile, Montauk, Dulce, and Area 51 (and other such places), continue on, unabated. We each must draw our own conclusions on individuals such as Bob Lazar and Dan Burisch.

Was the so-called alien spaceship really just a high-altitude balloon designed to detect radiation from Soviet nuclear tests? Or are the government reports a smoke screen for an even bigger secret, one concerning covert military operations at Area 51?

Let's take a look at the test-flying of highly-advanced, radical aircraft at Area 51, this is certainly a part of it. The men and women who toiled in obscurity out there and protected our security and won the Cold War, deserve to be known and respected.

GROOM LAKE, NEVADA:

The floor of this natural salt flat has become known as one of the longest airstrips in the world, measuring more than four miles from end to end. And if there were an American Book of Secrets, it would most likely contain information about hundreds of military aircraft tested on the runways at Groom Lake.

There's absolutely no doubt, if we look back into the history of Area 51 since the early 1950s, much of it has focused upon the design and deployment and test flying of highly advanced radical aircraft.

In recently declassified documents, the U. S. Air Force revealed that they had used the Groom Lake Site for a variety of classified activities. Many believe that this is an admission that the government used Area 51 to conduct top secret tests on the U-2 spy plane. First taking flight on August 1, 1955, the U-2 was capable of soaring as high as 70,000 feet, beyond the reach of Soviet technology. It also had groundbreaking cameras and optics designed to take invaluable pictures of facilities, weapons and technology being developed by the enemy during the Cold War.

The U-2 spy plane was a special aircraft, because it was very lightweight, had very high-altitude capability, a very long range, and nothing could shoot it down for years. The U-2 was very successful. Then finally, they were shot down, so that's the reason why the Air Force had to develop the next one, which was at least three times to four times faster and much higher capability.

Seven years after creating and launching the U-2 at Area 51, Lockheed began testing their next reconnaissance aircraft at the base in April, 1962.Top secret and referred to only by its codename “Oxcart” for more than 40 years, program details only became available in UFO magazines.

2,850 missions were flown out of Groom Lake with the A-12 which flies faster than a bullet and up to 90,000 feet. Groom Lake is the perfect place for the A-12 to fly in and out, and no one can follow or trace it. The A-12 was the first Mach-3 spy plane, and everything had to be invented just for it. Therefore, stealth technology was essentially developed at Area 51. The beginnings took place during the Oxcart Program, but in the 1970s, this was expanded.

A project called Have Blue developed two technology prototypes which were then tested. They were faceted like diamonds, very un-aerodynamic shape, but very resistant to being tracked by radar. This led to the development of the F-117A stealth fighter, which was highly successful during Operation Desert Storm, able to fly through Iraqi air defenses, which were heavily defended, without being hit once.

Some people also believe that Area 51 is home to the top secret research of various unmanned aerial vehicles, or UAVs. The U.S. tested the first UAVs in the ’60s. The D-21 was a drone that we were designing to fly over China. That’s who the U.S. was needing to spy on at the moment, at that time. And it would be launched off of a modified A-12. In other words, we’d launch it at 90,000 feet at Mach 3. And it was a stealth, just like the mother ship. It would take its photographs, and then it’d drop them off at sea, and then disintegrate itself.

In September, 1995, President Bill Clinton issued a presidential determination, exempting Area 51 from environmental disclosure laws. The order came following a lawsuit filed by former Area 51 workers who alleged they had become ill after being exposed. It was the rule that nothing could leave Area 51, not a computer, not a piece of trash, nothing. Everything had to be destroyed there.

So, they would dig these great big trenches, throw all this stuff in the trench, douse it with jet fuel, and set it on fire; these gigantic clouds of toxic muck would float over the base. Everybody who worked out there breathed this stuff. The lawsuit was dismissed, based on the grounds that further investigation would breach national security.

One secret has been exposed and confirmed: Reverse engineering has been going on at Area 51 since the 1950s. The research was based on foreign technology but could well be applied to alien craft and technology as well.

From a well-known, retired Air Force major:

“The U.S. did reverse engineer the Soviet MIGs. We needed to know why they were whacking us so badly in Vietnam. The kill ratio was nine to one against us. We didn’t know why, so we went through a technical phase where we tore them down to see what made them work, whatever they had — radios, missiles, ejection seats— everything about them.

“Then we went into the tactical phase where we actually flew them against our planes to see, compare the maneuverability and the, figure out what they could do that we couldn’t.

“The men and women who toiled in obscurity out there, for so many years, who did all this work, made so many sacrifices, protected our security and won the Cold War!”

From a technician formerly employed at Area 51:

“This thing (Area 51) goes down deep, like, ten, 20 floors down. One of those shafts— that you could put two B-52s side by side and still have six feet on either wing tip.

“The 625 square miles of restricted skies above Area 51 is the most highly guarded airspace in the world, but with modern satellite technology, getting a bird’s-eye view of Area 51 has become as easy as the click of a mouse. With hangars and runways now clearly seen in satellite photos, is it possible a secret operation exists below the desert surface? As I understand it, Area 51 is built like an upside-down ice cream cone. You see a little bit at the very top, including runways.

“But then, you go down, and it spreads out. And what goes on down there, who knows? All of the accounts from individuals who’ve spoken to journalists about Area 51, all of them have said this thing goes down deep. You hear things like ten, 20 floors down. I never got below the 5th floor or level, so I will not claim that I know exactly."

Could there be secret underground facilities 20 floors below Area 51? And if so, why did they go so deep?

As the base was being developed in the 1950s, President Eisenhower negotiated an open skies agreement with the Soviet Union. And under the open skies agreement, we could look at their installations from on high, and they could look at our installations from on high.

So, the U.S. began using huge tunneling machines to dig out the earth under Area 51, under the whole desert complex. Some researchers claim Area 51 is the central hub of the vast underground network connected to other top secret facilities across the country, including Montauk and Dulce.

Materials and technology are transported through a subterranean government complex by high-speed mag-lev trains traveling at up to Mach 2 speed. There probably are hundreds of bases that are completely secret. Area 51 is the tip of the iceberg. However, it is one of the most popularized sites that is secret, and it basically operates as a cover for all the other sites.

The investigators all flock to Area 51 but there are many other secret sites in the vast general area which have top secret status and projects. For instance, you can go underground at Edwards Air Force Base in the high desert of California and very quickly get transported underground to the Nelis Area 51 facility.

I interviewed a gentleman who worked for General Electric.

He said that there were four connecting shafts that connected to the shaft that he was on, and one of those shafts was twice as big as the shaft that he was in.

What might these huge and wide shafts have been designed to accommodate? And what could they be transporting?

Area 51 specialist T. D. Barnes claims a large underground testing facility can be found near the Nevada Test Site. According to Barnes, the secret subterranean installation was used from 1952 to 1972 to test nuclear rockets developed under a program called Project NERVA.

Barnes says, “The NERVA project was, uh, primarily a NASA project. But we were developing a nuclear rocket engine to go to Mars. That’s just one of the places.

You get the stories that we worked underground at Jackass Flats. We did, we went underground. We had the engines test stems up above us with a nuclear rocket shooting a plume up into the air, and it’s, you know, nose down. And we were underground ‘cause it was so radioactive.”

This knowledge has led some to speculate that alien doomsday weapons, high-tech lasers and even teleportation devices have also been tested and developed underground at Area 51, through reverse engineering. Is it likely that these facilities back-engineer and test extraterrestrial technology? Of course, it is.

Up until about 1950, human knowledge and technology advanced every 20 or 30 years. However, since 1950, it has exploded. Fiber optics, LEDs, computer technology, night vision, and much more, where did all that come from? Are we really so smart that we can advance technology so fast or did we find it somewhere else, not of this Earth?

One of the areas that the Air Force has looked into is actually trying to find ways to modify the weather. In stark and simple terms, they could then provoke earthquakes, create tsunamis, and provoke drought where you wanted.

What about the ultimate? What about time travel? Imagine a weapon so powerful that you could send military units back into the past to alter history.

It’s the ultimate doomsday weapon. Is there any possibility that the U.S experiments or have developed any or all of these?

Is there any proof to the controversial claims of secret projects based on reverse engineering of extraterrestrial technology?

In 1984, documents emerged from the National Archives describing a top secret group called the Majestic 12, formed by President Truman in September 1947, in the wake of the Roswell incident. The papers describe the secret committee as 12 scientists, military leaders and government officials ordered to investigate UFO activity. Some speculate the Majestic 12 may have been based at Area 51. They have become known as the MJ-12 documents or the Majestic 12 documents. They all discuss, in detail, various elements of ET, UFO reality from a very deep, classified level.

All Area 51 (and beyond) possibilities were created after the National Security Act of 1947, which was apparently rushed into law just months after the Roswell incident. After months of investigation, the Federal Bureau of Investigation then confiscated the documents and declared the Majestic 12 were completely bogus.

However, when the papers were released back to the public, they were heavily redacted. Why? What were they hiding? Some of the UFO documents that were yanked out of the intelligence community were just completely blacked out. Therefore, we have a phenomenon that's top secret and yet we are not seeing any of the top secret documents pertaining to it. So, there's a problem there!

Are the Majestic 12 documents released in 1984, a smoking gun? Could they prove that the government was and still is actively engaged in reverse engineering alien technology at and possibly under Area 51? And, if the UFO claims are baseless, why is the military base cloaked in secrecy?

In 2011, a book titled Area 51: An Uncensored History of America's Top Secret Military Base, written by journalist Annie Jacobsen, was released. In it, she claims Soviet leader Joseph Stalin sent a remotely controlled disc-shaped craft filled with surgically altered children into the United States, crashing at Roswell in 1947.

An anonymous source, who has since been identified as an engineer, who worked out at the Nevada test site, had this wild claim that the thing that crashed at Roswell was not an alien spacecraft but was, in fact, something from the Soviet Union, an aircraft with advanced hovering capabilities, that was flown over here and then crashed intentionally to create a War of the Worlds type panic in the United States.

Supposedly, Joseph Stalin, Soviet Premier, really wanted to frighten the U. S. public and government, and so the plan was to biologically alter a number of Russian children.

To fake an alien invasion, these weird-looking kids would get out and the belief would be, “Oh, my God, America has just been invaded by aliens,” that it would possibly disrupt the Earth’s infrastructure, which might allow Russia to launch a sneak attack or take advantage of the situation.

Many disputed and still dispute Jacobsen’s claim, but could outrageous tales of what might go on at Area 51, be strategic ploys to conceal what’s really going on at the top secret facility?

I am positive that there were no deformed children at Roswell in 1947.That was disinformation to cover up the fact that there were actually aliens in the craft that crashed at Roswell.

The easiest way of keeping a secret is obfuscation. You just cover it all over with layer after layer of story, counter-story, claim, counter-claim, one theory after another theory, and then everybody gets so confused and arguing over all the various theories. That’s keeping a secret!

How will we ever know if any of the stories that come out of Area 51 are true? Could there be an intricate mythology created to cover up the truth? Have the UFO stories and conspiracy theories surrounding Area 51 simply been a smoke screen to protect actual clandestine military projects? Or is the truth about Area 51 really stranger than fiction?

The truth will come out! It can’t hide it forever. We’re on a trajectory that is going to take us, like it or not, into that very, very blinding light of the truth.

CHAPTER EIGHT:

AREA 51, 52, 53 & 54,

REALITIES

Area 51 is America's most infamous military installation. For decades, witnesses in that area have been and are seeing unusual craft hovering over the base. This is the place where top secret experiments, involving alien technology, are rumored to be taking place. Is there extraterrestrial technology at Area 51, and is Area 51 still viable, now that the top secret is out?

The underground expansion of Area 51 has stretched all the way through Nevada into Utah. However, do other, even more covert places exist, where mankind's extraterrestrial future is being prepared? Where are Areas 52, 53, and 54?

LANGLEY, VIRGINIA, AUGUST 15, 2013:

After decades of secrecy, denials and cover-ups, the CIA declassifies documents which acknowledge the existence of a top secret military research facility known as Area 51. This was an historic announcement. Finally, these years of rumors that the UFO community and the conspiracy theory community had been claiming to be true, had been validated.

The federal government was forced to acknowledge the existence of the Area 51 base because of a Freedom of Information Act request. It took them over a decade to actually respond, but in the end, they eventually had to admit what everybody already knew, which was that Area 51 did exist.

Since 1955, this clandestine base, located in the remote desert of southern Nevada, has been considered the epicenter of the military's most classified projects, from the U-2 spy plane to the F-117 stealth fighter, to the stealth bomber. But, many people believe that in the darkest corners of Area 51 lurks an even bigger secret; one that hides the ultimate evidence of extraterrestrial contact.

While the admission that Area 51 existed was important, it didn't go far enough for many people who were hoping that the government was going to confirm all the rumors about crashed

UFOs and recovered alien technology were true. The government said nothing about any of that!

They only gave us the exact minimal amount of information that was requested. They certainly appear to still be covering up what exactly goes on at Area 51.

Over the years, there have been a number of claims by people who have been associated with Area 51 who have spoken to journalists or whistle-blowers in which they have stated, quite explicitly, that there is extraterrestrial technology at Area 51.

The theory is that they had hired propulsion experts, engineers, physicists, to reverse engineer alien propulsion technology, which is far in advance of ours, and they are doing that at Area 51. We also have rumors that there are alien spacecraft on the base that are actually tested and flown out of Area 51.

Is it possible that scientists at Area 51 have been able to not merely study, but successfully reverse engineer an extraterrestrial craft? For 30 years, people have gone to the perimeter with binoculars, cameras and telescopes. They have seen bright objects moving in angular motions, or zigzag motions, and in ways that seem to be well beyond anything that we have ever seen, and propulsion technology that's not readily identifiable.

However, if Area 51 is the place where the U. S. government is conducting its most secret military research, and possibly hiding decades of evidence concerning alien contact, just how secret is it now? If everyone knows that it exists and what kind of work is done there, could Area 51 have outlived its purpose as a strategic military asset?

In search of the answers, I traveled to Henderson, Nevada, and arranged to meet with T. D. Barnes, a former electrical engineer who worked on classified military projects at Area 51 for more than four decades. Barnes revealed to his wife in 2009 where he had worked for nearly fifty years and what he did there.

Martin T. Dooley: You revealed this to her just in 2009?

T.D. Yeah, 2009.

Martin: And when did you start your work there?

T.D. I began working at Area 51 in 1960.

Martin: So almost 50 years you kept it a secret from your wife.

T.D. She had no idea.

Martin: And what did you work on?

T.D. I am now retired but I was radar and electronics. I have expertise on Soviet electronics.

Martin: Okay. Let's hypothetically say that a UFO crashes and you get ahold of it. Would we be able to reverse engineer that technology?

T.D. Oh, we could with a bit of luck which we often had. Even back in the 1980s, we had a program "the rods from god." We put them into orbit above the Earth and they could be released over a target and with just the velocity that they would re-enter the atmosphere, the rods could penetrate bunkers and fortified missile silos.

Martin: Wow. I mean, for all intents and purposes, that was a secret space program. Do you think that this secret space program stills exists today?

T.D. Much more, I'm sure. What we were able to develop back then, they were able to apply later on. The technology would just leapfrog and continue to improve.

Martin. Okay. Now, while you were working there, did you ever see anything weird up in the sky?

T.D. Absolutely. Planes that no one else has ever seen. They had no wings. They were flying bathtubs utilizing a lofting technology that has never been used before. You see something like that and you will believe you've seen a real flying saucer.

Martin: In your estimation, when you read these stories about some companies trying to develop a warp drive, or even an antimatter propulsion system, is this something actually achievable?

T.D. We have tried it all. We had some success but not always. Anti-gravity drives, we developed but it lacked stability.

What are they working on now? If Area 51's purpose is still to operate as the government's most highly classified, top secret laboratory, why would they admit to the existence of Area 51? Especially after decades of silence?

One possibility about the public announcement that Area 51 exists, is that the real action has moved elsewhere. In other words, the CIA, the government, only felt able to come clean about this because the real secrets have been moved. In a real sense, perhaps, the question is not so much, “What’s going on at Area 51?” as “What’s going on at Areas 52, 53, and 54?”

Might there be other, even more secret locations, where the government is continuing to study and replicate extraterrestrial technology? Having one big place where everybody is doing the research is not a good idea because it would be hard to hide from the general public and also there could be a sneak attack – unlikely but not impossible.

Therefore, the idea that there might be any single, individual Area 51 where they are reverse engineering alien spacecraft, seems an outdated concept.

T.D. “If I were going to do it, I would spread the technology in pieces out across the country. Area 51 might be a decoy these days. One rumor takes the focus away from another, and that ‘other’ may be even bigger operations and projects at numerous sites all across the United States.

“The fact that they would finally admit that Area 51 exists is actually a smoke screen. What’s really going on is that you have got all these massive underground facilities. You can take all the really good stuff you do not want anybody to see and simply move it somewhere else in the blink of an eye.”

While the public remains focused on what is or is not happening at Area 51, could the government be hiding its research into extraterrestrial technology at other strategic sites all across the country? Certainly, we have delved into the likes of Montauk and Dulce, but there well could be more secret bases too. Remember the extensive tunnel system!

THE FAR-REACHING TUNNEL SYSTEM:

Perhaps the answer can be found by investigating reports of an extensive tunneling operation currently underway in the Nevada desert.

Rachael, Nevada, March 17, 2018.

Just outside the perimeter of Area 51, an investigator meets with researcher Wolf McCarron and mining expert Christian Gronau. They are here to investigate rumors of an alleged tunnel network that lies beneath Area 51.

Wolf and Christian believe this location, the Tempiute Mine, is one of several old Nevada mines that have been used to expand operations at Area 51, deep underground.

Christian: I am a miner, about 100 miles north of Area 51 here, and I've been mining there since 1992. I also own a mine in Goldfield. So I'm just an avid miner, you know I search these out.

Martin: So what can you tell us about Area 51?

Christian: Well, Area 51, what you see, like on Google Imagery, everything they do is underground. I mean, because of Google and so many other new detective-like inventions, the secret bases go farther and farther underground.

Martin: And what evidence have you come across as a miner that would corroborate your idea?

Christian: People are questioning, well, if they are going down, where is all the dirt going? Well, it is going to these nearby mines, and they're putting it in huge mountains, and they are heap leaching it. And by the time they are done heap leaching a huge mountain, it goes down to nothing. Now, to the uninitiated, what does heap leaching mean?

Christian: It is that they pile the dirt up into a large mountain, hundreds of feet high, and they run hoses all the way through it, like every two feet, and they leach in mercury and cyanide. And what that does, it will take large boulders and actually just bring them down to nothing.

Martin: Really?

Christian: Yeah. The government must be using heap leaching inside the Tempiute Mine in order to hide the massive amounts of dirt being removed because of their digging operations.

Martin: If so, how is the government able to conduct such an enormous operation without arousing the suspicion of the local miners?

Christian: These mines around here have gold, silver, lead. So any mine would be more than happy to accept the ore. And it is kinda like hush-up money. I've witnessed this hush up and dealt with this a lot.

Martin: Hush up of what?

Christian: Hush up of the base and the tunnels of Area 51. It is self-explanatory that the reason why people would go underground is if there are experiments going on there that they feel should have no interference, no publicity.

Christian: The U.S. military has been stretching its operations at Area 51 both outward and downward, in order to keep its top secret work even more secret. It is my own belief, based on a lot of good study and knowledge, that there is most likely a large, I would even say vast, web of interconnected, underground bases and tunnels that exist. They started doing it partially just to protect against an atomic strike that could have happened from the Soviet Union. And you need secure underground facilities. Well, they took that and just ran with it.

Christian: There are those who believe that the underground operations being conducted at Area 51 are only the tip of an enormous iceberg. It is just one of many secret government facilities, all connected to each other by a vast network of underground high-speed trains; the underground train system is said to be centered around Cheyenne Mountain in Colorado Springs.

(Martin here): This is a mountain that has been hollowed out by the U.S. military. It is the NORAD central command. And they go from Cheyenne Mountain, in Colorado Springs, to Dulce, New Mexico, which we covered in previous chapters. It goes to Los Alamos, in New Mexico, then to Albuquerque, and to Roswell, and to Area 51, in Nevada. All of these military bases are essentially connected by a secret underground subway system. The U.S. tunnel system also stretches to all points east, including Montauk Point.

Christian: The folks who are looking at Area 51, maybe they are therefore not looking at Dulce. Dulce, New Mexico, is on the Jicarilla Apache Reservation. It is a separate entity. It is part of the Apache Nation. In other words, you cannot just go there. There is a peak just north of the town of Dulce called Archuleta Peak. And residents of Dulce claim to have seen UFOs coming in and out of that mountain.

Christian: The U. S. government is saying that there is nothing there, they have no military base there, there is not some underground train network. And yet, people who live there say there is something going on here. So, just like Area 51, where the government was saying, hey, there's nothing going on here, but researchers for decades knew and investigated things that were going on there. Perhaps one day, they will admit yes, something was going on there.

(Martin here): Is there really a vast network of secret government laboratories, each conducting experiments using extraterrestrial technology? For many of us, the answer is a profound yes. And we offer, as additional proof, a facility not in the Southwest but much farther to the east. I is a military base we claim has been working directly with extraterrestrials for decades and operating very close to the location where mankind made its first successful effort to reach the sky. We actually have an eyewitness.

WRIGHT-PATTERSON AIR FORCE BASE,

DAYTON, OHIO:

Here, on the very same plains where Wilbur and Orville Wright lifted mankind into the era of flight, sits Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, one of the largest and highest-funded bases in the nation's military. It is up there as one of the single most important military, technology, back-engineering study in biological entities of any place we have.

Wright-Patterson or Wright-Pat, as it is more commonly called, has been a hub of extraterrestrial investigation and experimentation for decades. Some even consider it of greater strategic importance than Area 51.

The rumors and stories of aliens at Wright-Pat have been very widespread for a very long period of time. And there have also been claims that unknown aerial vehicles or UFOs are being stored deep underground.

On June 14, 1947, an unidentified object reportedly crashed on a farm outside the town of Roswell, New Mexico. According to eyewitnesses, the object resembled some sort of flying disc, and the bodies recovered from the wreckage looked like nothing from this planet.

Within days, the so-called Roswell incident captured the imaginations of millions of people around the world. But just as the event jump-started America's interest in UFOs, it also ushered in the era of the government cover-up. The Roswell Base issued a press release, and then several hours later, proceeded to deny it.

"Sorry, people, just a weather balloon. Our top intelligence officers did not know what they were looking at."

However, we actually have evidence of an FBI memo saying that which was recovered was being brought to Wright Field for analysis. You are not going to bring balloon parts to Wright Field for analysis. That's not going to happen.

You have got to remember that in 1947 when the Roswell crash happened, there was no Area 51 in Nevada. And in fact, the important Air Force headquarters to study these crashed artifacts and possibly alien bodies was Wright-Patterson Air Force Base in Dayton, Ohio.

The reason that this wreckage would have been sent to Wright-Patterson Air Force Base is because at that time, it was the center of the Air Force's Foreign Technology Division, meaning the division that actually studied foreign aircraft, foreign technologies of all kinds; certainly, alien tech, wrecked alien spacecrafts and reports of alien spacecraft sightings would be sent there to be studied by the Foreign Technology Division.

Is it possible that Wright-Patterson Air Force Base is still housing the remains of the object recovered from the New Mexico desert more than 70 years ago? What about the bodies of the UFO occupants? They are said to have been autopsied, studied, dissected at Wright-Pat as well. Renown UFO researcher Leonard Stringfield detailed all shocking truth in his UFO Crash-Retrieval Documents.

Even now, in the last few years, there have been important UFO sightings around Dayton, Ohio. Witnesses in that area are looking out over Wright-Patterson Air Force Base and, even in broad daylight, seeing unusual craft hovering over the base or in the vicinity of the base.

There is a very distinct possibility that is supported by the fact that no jets are released when these UFOs appear. It is almost as if they know what they are. Maybe it is one of our own reverse engineered craft? Or maybe the aliens, for some reason, keep an eye on the base which has their dissected their crewmembers on ice.

Two well-known UFO investigations took place at Wright-Patterson: Project Sign and Project Blue Book. Yes, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base was the center, the hub, for Project Sign and Project Blue Book. Now, both of these projects were involved with one essential task, which was the study and categorization of reports of unidentified flying objects.

PROJECT SIGN was set up after the flying saucer wave of sightings across the United States in 1947, and shortly after the Roswell crash. Sign researched and investigated the phenomenon, taking reports, not just from the public, but from the military, from pilots who were seeing things, from radar operators who were tracking these objects. This was the U. S. government’s formal UFO program.

PROJECT BLUE BOOK:

The Air Force had 22 years of UFO investigation that was housed in the Foreign Technology Division, and Blue Book is the most famous and ran for the longest period of time. They went out and they looked for foreign technology, including crashed wreckage. Then they had access to all of the technical expertise on the base. In 1969, after compiling and studying more than 12,000 UFO sightings, Project Blue Book was terminated.

Most of the sightings were categorized as high-altitude spy planes or natural aerial phenomena, although approximately 700 unidentified cases still remain. But while the U. S. Air Force insists to this day that credible evidence of extraterrestrial visitation never existed, many former employees of Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, such as Ray Szymanski, have come forward with a very different story.

“I started working at Wright- Patterson in January of 1973, and I had 38 years and 9 months of service when I retired. I spent nearly my entire career at Air Force Research Labs, and I did advanced research and development. On the first day of working there, I had a mentor. His name was Corvette Al.

“He was the equivalent of a flag officer, a general or an admiral, and he said, ‘Let’s go through the hangar,’ and as we stepped into that hangar, he turned to me and said, ‘Have you heard about our aliens?’

I said, ‘What?’

He said, ‘Yeah, we have aliens here on the base!’

I said, ‘Really?’

And then, he said, ‘Well, yeah, there was a crash out west, and they brought the aliens and their machine.’

He used the word ‘machine.’

…brought here to Wright-Patterson for evaluation and possible exploitation.

Hangar 18 was this mysterious hangar at Wright Field where we actually had an eyewitness who was taken to Hangar 18, Lieutenant Colonel Marion Magruder. He was a fighter pilot in the United States Marine Corps who saw the alien technology and he saw the live alien. It looked human, but its head was larger than human, its arms were much longer, and it moved in a wavy motion.

The humanoid communicated with Magruder telepathically, and the Army and the Air Force, as well as the higher branches of the Pentagon, were absolutely fascinated by the fact that here were creatures who could communicate without using words. Thus began a series of experiments into psychokinesis, psychic projection, thought projection and remote viewing.

If the Magruder account is true, and the U. S. military was once using live aliens for scientific study, where did those experiments take place? Was it at Wright-Patterson? Area 51? Or were they conducted at yet another facility? And, if so, where? And are they still taking place today?

Long Island, New York. Here, at the eastern tip of the island, is all that remains of the Montauk Air Force Station. Originally established as a naval base in 1917 due to its strategic defensive location, the Montauk installation protected the East Coast from submarines and bombers for several decades, before it was decommissioned in 1981.

However, as we explored in the first chapters of this book, according to statements from multiple whistle-blowers, a secret laboratory hidden deep beneath the base may still be operating. It is the perfect cover. You have a lax topside operation, an Air Force Station at which nothing is going on, but underneath the ground, you have this extremely elaborate experiment going on, many levels of an underground base.

After 1981, there was not an Air Force Station even there, it became a state park.

The confidantes we have talked to, all say they do not enter the base through a topside location. At Montauk they would enter Brookhaven National Laboratories and travel on a train underneath the ground to Montauk. So people that are working aboveground don’t know what’s going on underneath the ground.

For theorists, Montauk, like Area 51 and Wright-Patterson, remains notorious as one of the places the U. S. military would carry out numerous experiments, often with the aid of otherworldly technology. Montauk actually ties in with something that we absolutely know to be real, because we have declassified documents on it, and that is MK-Ultra.

MK-Ultra was a program run by the CIA and the U. S. Army, and it literally tried to harness the technique of mind control. At Montauk, remote influencing is one example of what they were doing. This is the idea that you can effectively use the power of your mind to influence somebody else's behavior. Clearly, there would be huge military value in such techniques, and that, of course, is exactly why they were doing them. Of course, military level super-strong hallucinogenic drugs were involved, as MK-Ultra revelations, made apparent.

This was stuff that was so beyond the normal thought processes of the military mind. It was not making better guns, better ammo, more efficient airplanes. This was way beyond that. This was a program that used all sorts of different techniques to try to control human thought.

As we have explored in the first chapters, mind control, remote thought manipulation, and the beginnings of the remote viewing program, these all took place in the expanded underground network of U. S. military installations.

Did our military get these ideas from extraterrestrials and perhaps even from the technology reportedly recovered after the crash at Roswell?

VERNON H is one of my trusted contacts: "The big question has always been, were they operating with the technologies that they had because they were given to our government by non-humans, legitimately, as some kind of collaboration or trade, for us to experiment with?

"One thing that was at Montauk and probably other bases too, but it is always called the Montauk Chair. It had some kind of wires, or there is some kind of extraterrestrial technology associated with this chair and that, combined with the individual's innate psychic capabilities, would allow you to engage in transforming reality in one way or another.

“The subject would sit in the chair, and this chair was meant to manifest thought into physical reality. And included in that are telekinesis, remote viewing. One of the experiments that they used at first was to manifest, let’s say, a glass or a ball, something simple, an inanimate object. Whatever the subject was thinking would manifest into physical reality.

“Eventually, this evolved into heightened psychic abilities. They claimed they could teleport from one place to another. According to many of us, accounts of the so-called Montauk Chair and its connection to mind control are strangely similar to accounts of a chair that dates back to the days of the pharaohs: the throne of Ptah.”

Ptah was one of the most intriguing gods of Ancient Egypt. He was the god before all the other gods. He created Earth. He created humanity. Unlike the other gods, Ptah would create the world with his thought. He would think it, feel it and hence, it was created. Ptah is portrayed sitting on a throne. And this throne is thought to be the center point from which his thought is able to manifest creation.

What is fascinating about these scenes is that this throne is feathered. It is feathered because it flies. It is known as his ascension throne. When we compare the descriptions of the Montauk Chair with the ascension throne of Ptah, it raises the question: Was the U. S. military involved in reverse engineering an extraterrestrial technology that was used thousands of years ago in Ancient Egypt? Could the legends about an Egyptian god and his flying throne and the report of a thought-control chair at the Montauk really be connected?

UFO and other investigators and theorists say “Yes,” and suggest that not only has the U. S. government been working to acquire and attempt to perfect alien technology for decades, but that such operations are still going on at the top-secret bases we have explored in this book, and perhaps other places as well.

Several people have claimed that they were part of these experiments. They do recall sitting in a special chair. And people who should know (perhaps even psychically, since their psi skills were developed), say that today there is still activity in the underground bases along these lines.

Is there a vast network of government laboratories and factories where extraterrestrial technology is being harvested? Theorists and individuals who have also been involved, either as workers or victims, insist such an incredible notion is true that alien technology is not only being tested, but that it is already being used.

WASHINGTON, D. C., DECEMBER 16, 2017:

After a decade of speculation within the UFO community, officials at the Pentagon confirm the existence of a highly secretive UFO research project known as the Advanced Aerospace Threat Identification Program, or AATIP. The project was funded by Congress in 2007 with the help of Senator Harry Reid of Nevada.

What's different about the AATIP program was the fact that it involved a private company, Bigelow Aerospace. This had never been done before. The government previously has always kept all of its UFO extraterrestrial information, all of its reports, completely separately. So that makes it unique and very different from Projects Sign and Blue Book.

The Pentagon ran this program officially from 2007 to 2012, although there is a lot of reason to believe that the program not only has continued, but that multiple programs of this sort have continued. But why would the U. S. government allow such sensitive research to take place outside of its secure military facilities? According to ancient astronaut theorists, the answer is all too obvious.

Over the years, the government realized, if you can take projects that were developing, move them from inside the Pentagon itself, and (move them) into the industrial realm, guess what you get to avoid? Freedom of information.

Inside the government, the military, Department of Defense, the scientists and engineers there, are possibly susceptible to the Freedom of Information Act. People can fill out a Freedom of Information Act form and request information on any government program.

PRIVATE COMPANIES ARE NOT SUSCEPTIBLE. They don't have to adhere to the Freedom of Information Act. Therefore, the big aerospace defense companies, for example, can do their own research in their own private facilities, and they never have to tell you anything about that if they do not want to. And when you look at the exemptions to the Freedom of Information Act, Exemption #4 covers trade secrets, information which belongs to the private sector.

When the government put out some of their UFO programs to Bigelow Aerospace, what they were doing, cleverly, was making scrutiny much more difficult.

And we know from Luis Elizondo, the program manager of the AATIP program, that they received a number of shocking UFO cases that came their way in connection with the U. S. military. The term Elizondo uses is "beyond next generation technology."

According to sources within the AATIP program, the government secretly collects materials often referred to as "metamaterials" from extraterrestrial crash sites and then turns them over to be reverse engineered by approved contractors, like those at Bigelow Aerospace. Metamaterials are materials that have been combined in such a way that the isotopic ratios of the materials are not found on Planet Earth.

VERNON H: "I worked with some of these artifacts. I put them through various tests. There was nothing unusual about the materials they were made of, but they were layered in such a way that it took some doing to make them in their configuration.

"And also, the interesting piece of it was when you put them under extremely high electric fields, they tend to show properties of propulsion, meaning they would move in directions, sometimes toward the field, sometimes away from the field, that was not typical of standard electrostatic things that I had seen before.

"What metamaterials will do is, they will alter electromagnetic frequencies, or the visual spectrum. They can bend light if they are engineered in such a way. They can change acoustic properties. And the imagination is the limit. So they can really do almost anything!"

Is the government's increasing use of outside agencies and contractors designed to throw UFO investigators and others off the trail? And if so, does that mean that infamous top secret sites, like Area 51 and its alleged underground network of covert laboratories and military installations, will soon be obsolete?

Investigators and theorists say no, and they insist that, if anything, there are now more government sites engaged in extraterrestrial research than ever, and that this research is no longer being confined to areas within the United States, or even on Planet Earth.

May 26, 2015: The U. S. Air Force announces that SpaceX, an aerospace company run by billionaire CEO Elon Musk, is now eligible to participate in the launch of military satellites. The announcement leads many to speculate whether SpaceX may be contracted in the future for additional, and perhaps even more covert, military space projects.

In 2015, SpaceX which was a private corporation, of course, was actually certified by the U. S. government for national security launches into space. And what that means is, you have now, another private corporation which is authorized to actually put secret payloads into orbit. What that means is, their entire operation now kind of flows under the dark umbrella of national security.

It is possible that the private ventures, like SpaceX, like Bigelow Aerospace, Richard Branson, Jeff Bezos, and the various others, will come up with a way to make it economically viable to colonize Mars. For decades ever since the first Earth satellites and rovers began sending back data about the red planet, Mars has been the focus of intense scrutiny by UFO and paranormal investigators. They cite images of structures carvings and other strange anomalies as evidence that Mars was and might still be a hub of extraterrestrial activity.

Is it possible that the U. S. government, along with other nations, has proof that such an audacious notion is true? And could this be the reason why the human-based Mars missions are being conducted not by publicly funded governments, but by a number of privately funded corporations with their own seemingly disparate agendas? I am extremely familiar with this technique, and it is one of the ways that you protect classified information and big secrets.

You can have a highly classified project, but effectively, it is broken into small parts. Everyone's working on a piece of it. No one necessarily knows what the person next door to them is doing, and very few people have the big picture. It is even possible that somebody could be working on extraterrestrial technology and not know it.

We are on the cusp of a brand-new reality of super-advanced technology, that will see us colonizing the Moon, Mars, traveling into deep space. This is a chapter that is opening in human affairs that began as long ago as 1947 with the Roswell crash, after which the U. S. military began preparing us for a life in which we will be living with extraterrestrials, both on Earth and in space.

Are the U. S. government's efforts to examine and utilize extraterrestrials and their technology really on the threshold of a bold new era?

Will places like Area 51, Wright-Patterson, Montauk, Dulce, and even Mars, become part of an even larger and more powerful network? This will be a network which facilitates mankind's anticipated journey to the stars, but also a network which tramples of the individual's rights.

Some people's rights are and were trampled on already, because an individual person is a victim, like Phil Schneider, my cousin Megan, or whistle-blower Maria, the ex-Dulce worker. Our rights are trampled on because taxpayers are not allowed to know anything about what the government and military are doing, yet we make all of it possible financially. It is all very elitist. We are not a part, we are marginalized, pushed aside.

A truly advanced society would be able to make huge scientific and technical advancements without trampling on us. A truly advanced society would include us in the general knowledge even if specific information had to be kept among a few with security clearances.

We should be included in the knowledge that aliens exist and that they are here on Earth. No one should be used as a guinea pig in bizarre experiments which probably lend nothing to the general welfare or progress.

CHAPTER NINE:
IN CONCLUSION,
THE GREATEST TRUTH

Truth is a heavy load; a great, strangling burden for the spirit to bear. It is not easy; it is not a gift given, but a choice made, and the choice made may be difficult, indeed.

The road leads upwards toward the light but the laden traveler may never reach the end of it. Man approaches the unattainable truth only through a succession of errors; affliction comes to us, not to make us sad, but sober; not to make us sorry, but wise.

You will err no matter where the road may lead you; that's the basic condition of life required to establish your own identity. At some point every creature that lives must do so. It is the ultimate shadow, it is the verification of creation. Yet, it is the curse at work, the curse that feeds on all life everywhere in the universe.

The gravest error a thinking person can make is to believe that one particular version of history is absolute fact. History is recorded by a number of observers and none of them are impartial. It is change that is the dominant factor in society today. Sensible decisions can no longer be made without taking into account, not only the world as it is but the world as it will be.

The saddest aspect of life right now is that science gathers knowledge faster than society gathers wisdom. Each generation imagines itself more intelligent than those before and wiser than those that will follow. Man is the unnatural animal, the rebel child of nature and more and more does he turn himself against the harsh and fearful hand that reared him.

I think there is life on other planets. I think we're going to find it (assuming it has not already found us). And who knows? Maybe one day we'll find some other planet that's capable of sustaining life that has evolved carbon-based people over a long period of time who are also looking up at the stars, wondering: Is there anybody else out there? Are we the only ones?

We are a species of explorers. So, ultimately, we will come across some other type of intelligence. And when that happens, if that society, technologically speaking, is primitive, we'll become ancient astronauts with that culture.

Human history has become too much a matter of dogma taught by professionals in ivory towers as though it's all fact. Actually, much of human history is up for grabs. The further back you go, the more the history that's taught in the schools and universities begins to look like some kind of fairy story. We have logic, we have intuition, we have our senses. And to limit ourselves to the purely scientific route is a mistake.

We can send people to the moon, we can plan journeys to Mars, we can make cell phones, but we haven't explained the fundamental questions that we should be dealing with. Where do we come from? What are we supposed to do here? Where are we going? And, how can we be decent to each other as we go?

We really have not come up with the answers, and we know no better than the ancients that we're trying to explain.

It doesn't matter what you do as long as you change something from before you touched it into something that is like you when you take your hands away. The very concept of truth is fading away from this world and biological human minds will pass into history.

Solitude and isolation are painful things often beyond human endurance, for small creatures such as we will endure only through love.

Power in defense of freedom is greater than power on behalf of tyranny and oppression because power—real power—comes from our convictions which produce uncompromising action. Every daring attempt to make a great change in existing conditions, every lofty vision for the possibilities of the human race has been labeled "Utopian."

Like it or not, everything is changing. The result will be the most wondrous experience of humanity or the most horrible enslavement we can imagine. We must draw our strength from the very despair in which we have been forced to live.

We were born with potential, we were born with goodness and trust. We were born with ideals and dreams. We were born with greatness.

We are the universe in search of itself and it does not require many words to convey that truth. The ultimate end of all revolutionary social change is to establish the sanctity of human life, the right of every human on the planet to truth, liberty, and well-being.

Do not allow yourself to become entangled in the fear of change; remember: the greatest wound is where the brightest light will enter. We are here to laugh at the odds and live our lives so well that death will tremble to take us.

I often wonder about the nature of reality, about the creative force that forged the particles of the stars into the molecules of our bodies. Who are we? Where do we actually exist within the architecture of the universe? Are we alone or is the answer stranger than we can ever imagine?

I do not wish to burst your bubble, but the Earth is not the center of the universe. At least not anymore. You are not the star of your own movie. Humans are not the most intelligent creatures in the cosmos, we are not at the top of the food chain, and our current reality is merely a fantasy. I can’t prove any of this, and don’t even wish to try.

There is a mysterious, invisible power that pervades everything. We can’t see it or touch it, but we can feel it.

Reality is not what it used to be. Things are not what they seem. Everything around us is a mental construct. We create our own reality. Breaking that down is hard to do and once it is done, there is no coming back.

What happens to people when their fundamental beliefs—the bedrock of their understanding—explodes into a million unrecognizable pieces? When something comes careening from out of the blue and messes with everything we know. How do we react?

Beliefs are mercurial things. They direct our lives and choices moment by moment. They are stowaways of the imagination emporium. Harnessed to hunches, polished with proof. They’re like clothing we can’t afford. They elevate us, yet, they are not ours to keep. We discard them when they no longer serve our needs or when we discover they weren't real at all.

These accounts which have been related, are extraordinary, especially if they are true. Everything began for America in the high desert town of Roswell, New Mexico. Some places and some people are sources of gravity. Their certainty and wholeness command our attention. We are drawn to them by a natural law that requires we don't quite understand the mechanism. But the pull is like a tide, a current we can't deny. And, eventually, it wears us down.

The mountains appear to float on dry lake beds like spaceships from another galaxy. They seem to ride on a viscous material channeled through empty space by heat that rises and separates. It vitrifies everything it contacts like a green glass honey; an infernal psychedelic liquid drowning the emptiness with imagination.

The desert far north of Roswell is punctuated by thousands of gaping holes created by the thousands of atomic blasts that defined an era. What are they building in the desert north of Las Vegas, Nevada? What are they hiding? What in unholy hell are they hiding up there that we are not allowed to see?

There are particular moments that define each one of us. We may not know it at the time, but we learn it later. Every action creates a cascade of reactions. Life is a web of events; actions overlaid by consequences and woven across the fabric of time.

Future determined by past. Past defined by present. Present experienced through the lens of personal history. But for some it is obvious. You can put your finger on it; that definable, indelible moment when everything changed.

Ideas are the most dangerous weapons on the planet. They creep under your skin. Dormant, volatile, explosive. They attach to our collective consciousness and then, one day, man, they bubble to the surface and assert their power. And when detonated, life is never the same again, and we immediately know we were wrong, we were always wrong.

Earth is not the center of anything; not even close, but Galileo was imprisoned for life by the Catholic Church for publishing a book that denied religion's false history. His ideas were forbidden for the next 200 years. Other scientists and prophets were declared "heretics" and were murdered by being burned alive or tortured to death. This insanity continued for nearly one thousand years.

Can we be made whole if we're not validated, if our life story is challenged by a minority consensus? Most of us are not required to answer for our past. We couldn't really navigate this moment with an irreverence for what came before.

But some people are placed under a microscope, their words and actions scrutinized and challenged. And then they are told to stop telling lies. How much can a human take before he submits to the weight and consequence of distrust? Does he fade back into the shadows that formed him? Or does he lash out to carve his words into our flesh?

Is someone—or something—else here? Maybe visitors interested in us? In our genes? In our souls? Maybe we're property; just a forsaken commodity. Or livestock. And maybe they're our owners and caretakers, a savior or the top cat; who knows?

Or maybe every sighting of things in the sky is just a product of our collective consciousness, the false hope that humanity desperately needs intervention by external powers. We've always looked to the skies for answers instead of looking into ourselves.

Memory is a mirage and a mistress to desire, forever shape-shifting and ethereal. She's inherently elusive and malleable. We acknowledge her if it suits our fantasy at the moment. We fear her because she is unpredictable. Can we trust our own memories? What if we can't? Or what if we can? Can we return to the scene of the crime to extract hidden details and see more clearly what we thought we saw?

Hidden things are the most seductive. Secrets reach deep into our desires. They torment and titillate us like a ticking clock or a distant alarm with no apparent origin. They agitate us and force us to react. They endanger our complacency.

There is a missing element of our faith, but that's the real meaning of faith. There is something out there which hovers and promises salvation like an automated voice messaging system.

How would you define the idea of understanding? Well, it's knowing something and knowing what it means. I think there's two ways of looking at the idea of understanding. One is, if you don't look, you never will see. And the other is, if you look a little less, you might see a hell of a lot more.

In ancient times, people placed heavy stones on the graves of their dead so their souls would not wander and afflict the living. I always thought this was simply the practice of superstitious and primitive people. But from the stories we have learned — the dead can hover on the edge of our vision with the density and luminosity of an evening mist. And their claim on the Earth can be as legitimate and tenacious as our own.

Venal and evil people are destroying the world into which we were born. It's us against them, my good friends. The elitists do not want us to have good health and long life because it is not profitable. They force us to continue to use a toxic soup of dead plants and animals to fuel our automobiles, aircraft and ships because their false economy is based upon a century-old lie.

Don't compromise your principles or abandon your cause. The war for truth is never over and you should know that.

To crack life open at the seams, to dissect and examine the contents of truth is unnerving, like the reading of omens by viewing entrails or casting bones. To crack life open, enlightens and frightens you – and me. What you do with it is up to you, and what I do with it, is up to me.

But, if we could truly come together and empower our truth someday, that would be the greatest stride forward, the greatest reality. Then we would be free to go into the future, and with pride.